Pressed Bourassa eases language law

MONTREAL (CP) — In an apparent about-face Premier Robert Bourassa announced Tuesday proposed major changes in Quebec's Official Language Act to render the application of the law "more humane and more just."

Children wishing to enter English-language schools will still have to show "sufficient knowlege" of the language to gain admission as they do now.

But Bourassa and Education Minister Jean Bienvenue said they will recommend at the next session of the Quebec national assembly a review of the testing system used now to determine "sufficient knowledge."

The government will revise the language proficiency tests "so as to humanize and adapt the application of the law, especially in the case of five- and six-year-old children at the kindergarten and first-grade level."

The announcement appeared to contradict a position taken by the premier on Monday when he told an audience in Sept-Iles that under no circumstances would his government bow to ultimatums and revise the law.

Two other planned amendments to the law, will:

- Make "sufficient knowledge of the English language compulsory in all French-language schools in Quebec as soon as possible and by the third grade at the latest;"
- Allow children whose mother tongue is neither English nor French to enter English-language schools if they have brothers and sisters already enrolled in the English-language system.

Bourassa denied suggestions that the changes — especially the plan to make English compulsory by third grade in all French-language schools — constituted a change in the basic principle of the law, which makes French the province's official language.

"There is no retreat on the principle, only the details of their application changed," Bourassa said.

But both Bourassa and Bienvenue did say the decision to modify the law and its application resulted because of recent criticism.

Both men are running for election in Montreal ridings

Cliffhanger victory for Carter

Little change in Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrats swept to control of the House of Representatives and Senate Tuesday night, extending their 24-year domination of Congress.

Leading the Democratic parade was Daniel Moynihan, the former UN ambassador, who defeated Senator James Buckley in New York; Rep. Paul Sarbanes, who ousted Senator J. Glenn Beall in Maryland, and former state Democratic chairman James Sasser, who beat Senator William Brock, R—Tenn.

Democrats also won the traditionally Republican seat in Nebraska, where the incumbent was not running.

But the big Democratic bulge came from the re-election of a troop of warhorses — names like Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Edmund Muskie of Maine, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, John Stennis of Mississippi and Henry Jackson of Washington.

Republicans also scored four gains — ousting senators Vance Hartke in Indiana and Joseph Montoya in New Mexico and picking up previously Democratic Senate seats in Rhode Island and Missouri where incumbents were not running.

While there were eight turnovers in the Senate — and the promise of more as the returns rolled in — the picture in the House of Representatives remained static. In the first 200 House races called, just three seats changed hands — all Democrats losing to Republicans.

Among the House winners were the only husband and wife team in Congress — Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind., and Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan.

DAY OF TRUTH: Jimmy Carter and wife Rosalyn leave Plains, Georgia, polling place where Carter was fifth person to vote in his precinct. They watched vote returns in Atlanta. President and Mrs. Ford, arm in arm after flight from Grand Rapids, Mich., wave to well-wishers at White House. Fords watched returns in White House.

Overcomes Ford surge

- More election stories. Pages 2, 7

Colonist Wire Services

Jimmy Carter of Georgia wrested the presidency away from President Ford this morning, the two major U.S. wire services, Associated Press and United Press International said.

Carter snatched victory from a resurgent Ford in one of the closest elections in modern times by winning the electoral votes of Wisconsin, Hawaii and finally Mississippi for an electoral majority of 272 — two more than needed.

Carter, 52, the first president elected from a Deep South state since Zachary Taylor in 1848, built up a strong lead in his native south and border states and then saw it dwindle as Ford made a comeback in the west and southwest.

His victory destroyed the hopes of Gerald Ford to win election to the White House in his own right and ended a stunning comeback drive by the appointed president, who pulled into a dead heat with the former Georgia governor on election eve and then denied him victory for hours by winning state after key state.

But Ford's comeback drive fell short and James Earl Carter, 52, of Plains, Ga., capped a 22-month up-from-nowhere presidential drive by becoming the 38th president of the United States.

Carter had won 23 states with 272 electoral votes, and was leading in one state with 45 electoral votes.

Ford had won 20 states with 145 electoral votes, and was leading in seven states with 76 electoral votes.

Carter won the big eastern states of Pennsylvania and New York, and the electorial-vote bonanza in Texas.

Carter will have a solidly Democratic Congress to work with. Democrats handily retained control of the House and Senate, giving control of the legislative and executive branches to the same party for the first time since Lyndon Johnson's Great Society administration of 1964 through 1968.

Democrats had a 63-36 lead in th eSeante, including independent Harry Byrd of Virginia who forms with th emajority. The only race in doubt was in California where incumbant John Tunney was trailing Republican challenger S. I. Hayakawa.

The presidential vote, buoyed by an unexpectedly heavy turnout, produced the closest race in 16 years, belying reports of considerable apathy among the 100 million registered voters.

Political experts had concluded that a large popular vote would favor the 52-year-old Carter since registered Democrats substantially outnumber Republicans.

But as the vote counting moved westward into areas of expected Ford strength, it was obvious that the opinion polls were right in predicting a close race.

Opinion polsters, which at one time had Carter leading the 63-year-old president by a margin of two-to-one or better, sharply narrowed the lead in the final days of a lacklustre campaign to the point where none dared predict the outcome.

The neck-and-neck race, perhaps making the individual aware of the importance of his ballot, may have banished widely-reported apathy, notably among large numbers of Americans who remained undecided until the last moment.

The closest previous election in recent times was in 1960 when the late Democrat

Washington elects woman governor

Miss Ray, who campaigned as a "nonpolitician" and promised to shake up the state bureaucracy, forged a surprisingly strong victory over Republican John Spellman, the King County executive. With 43 per cent of the votes counted, she had 55 per cent to Spellman's 44 per cent.

Washington's electoral votes, the largest western block with the exception of California's, went to Ford, who took 53 per cent of the vote to Jimmy Carter's 45 per cent.

Voters also trounced a nuclear safeguards initiative and a plan to ban fluoridation of public water. They rejected measures to give holdover state senators a pay hike and to create a county home rule charter commission.

U.S. Senator Henry Jackson was easily re-elected and with the exception of U.S. Rep. Lloyd Meeds, the congressional delegation of one Republican and six Democrats sailed to new terms. Meeds, an Everett Democrat, was running neck-and-neck with John Nance Garner in the 2nd district.

Miss Ray, who served as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission under Richard Nixon, was a surprisingly strong victor. The race had been rated a tossup.

New York machines impounded by judge

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A state supreme court judge today ordered the impoundment of all 25,000 voting machines in New York state after Republicans, at the request of the White House, charged there had been voting irregularities in the close presidential balloting.

New York police were ordered to guard the machines.

The move may mean the New York results would not become official until there is a recount.

New York, with 41 of the 279 electoral college votes needed to win the presidency, is crucial to both President Ford and Jimmy Carter. Returns had indicated Carter had taken the state.

White House press spokesman Ron Nessen told reporters in Washington that a Republican campaign worker in the state had said he had reason to believe it is important to insure "the security of the ballots."

Ford losing voice from stump talks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford has "pretty much" lost his voice because of the strain of his 10-day coast to coast campaign swing, White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Tuesday night.

Ford's voice began getting hoarse a few days ago when he made several stump speeches each day and kept up a running commentary from a public address system in his limousine.

He watched a high school football game in rainy weather in Houston last weekend, and he has been out in the cold autumn air without a coat.

Dr. William Lukash, the White House physician, has been giving Ford's throat vapor treatments.

Danson heads defence, Ouellet back in cabinet

OTTAWA (CP) — Barney Danson is expected to be sworn in as defence minister and Andre Ouellet as minister of state for urban affairs at Government House today.

Sources also said Joseph Guay, Liberal MP from St. Boniface, will be appointed a minister without portfolio, thus restoring Manitoba representation to the cabinet.

Danson, now acting minister of defence and urban affairs minister, was openly congratulated in the Commons Tuesday night as word of the changes seeped through the Parliament Buildings.

Ouellet, former minister of consumer affairs, has been in the wings, awaiting the final outcome of his appeal of contempt of court. It was an open secret in Ottawa that Prime Minister Trudeau would bring him back to the halls of power, as soon as the court case ended.

Trudeau made some rather sweeping cabinet changes in September. But about a month later, James Richardson resigned as defence minister over differences he and Trudeau have on proposed changes in the constitution.

In addition, it opened up a cabinet spot for Guay, a former parliamentary secretary and now government whip. Guay and Richardson are the only Manitoba MPs.

Ouellet, reported to be working on behalf of former cabinet minister Jean Marchand in the Quebec election, quit his cabinet post last winter after his criticism of a judge's decision in an anti-combine case led to his conviction of contempt of court.

He was ordered to pay a $500 fine and to make a public apology. But an appeal court recently, while upholding the conviction and fine, said he did not have to apologize.

Democrats ready to celebrate

WASHINGTON (UP) — The way Democratic party chairman Robert Strauss saw it at mid-evening Tuesday, the White House was about to be returned to his party after eight years and it was time to "get ready for a hell of a celebration."

"There have been no surprises so far," Strauss told the crowd of several hundred. "We haven't lost a single state we expected to carry and are doing better in some than we thought we would."

Carter declared winner

John Kennedy edged Republican Richard Nixon by two-fifths of a percentage point, less than 120,000 votes among the nearly 69 million ballots cast.

Nixon was involved in another close race in 1968 when his margin over Democrat Hubert Humphrey was a little more than 500,000 votes and again less than a percentage point.

But in both cases the winner had a larger proportion of the electoral college votes which, in the final analysis, determine who will be president.

In each state the number of electors is equivalent to the total of its seats in the Senate and House of Representatives plus three for the District of Columbia. There are 538 electoral votes and 270 are needed for victory. The Democrat-dominated House of Representatives will have the task of picking the president if neither candidate gains the necessary electoral majority.

With voters filling 33 of the 100 Senate seats and choosing a completely new 435-seat House of Representatives, as well as 14 governors, there were enough interesting local considerations to bring out those Americans who might not otherwise bother to vote in the presidential race.

All told, about 6,000 offices will be filled.

The candidates and their vice-presidential running mates went home to vote on election day — Ford to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he practised law in the 1940s before spending 25 years in the House of Representatives; Carter to Plains, Ga., where he owns a peanut farm and warehousing business, Republican Senator Robert Dole to Russell, Kan., and Democratic Senator Walter Mondale to Afton, Minn.

The two presidential candidates ended their campaigns Monday night in Michigan, one of only seven states with more than 20 electoral votes. The others are California with 45. New York 41, Pennsylvania 27, Texas and Illinois 26 each, and Ohio 25. Michigan has 21.

Actually, Carter had been campaigning for two years. He reached a high point in July when he was easily the choice of the Democratic convention after knocking off such prominent opponents as Senator Henry Jackson, Representative Morris Udall and Senator Frank Church.

At that point, some polls had him favored by more than 60 per cent of the electorate with Ford under 30 per cent.

Ford, first man to reach the White House without being involved in a national poll, defeated former California governor Ronald Reagan in a hard fight for the Republican nomination in August and started upward in what the pollsters say is the strongest surge by a candidate in U.S. campaign history.

But there appeared to be more negative considerations than positive factors in the swing from Carter to Ford.

Unlike most incumbents, Ford had come to the presidency on the wings of scandal. He was the minority leader in the House of Representatives when he was named as Nixon's vice-president in 1973 after Spiro Agnew resigned. Agnew had faced charges of tax evasion. Ford became president in August, 1974, when Nixon quit under the weight of his involvement in the infamous Watergate scandal.

At the time, Ford denied that he had any intention of seeking election to the presidency in 1976. And his popularity suffered a setback when he promptly granted Nixon "a full, free and absolute pardon" for all "offences against the United States."

A tendency to trip over both his tongue and feet often made him the butt of humor and the darling of political cartoonists, further dimming his aspirations.

But if he lacked the personality that had distinguished such other presidents as Franklin Roosevelt and John Kennedy, he had the benefit of running against an opponent whose drive and ambition made many voters suspicious.

A a time when Americans seemed to be looking for stability, Carter was saddled with a Democratic policy that made him appear more liberal in the campaign for the presidency. That was in contrast to the conservative look he displayed when fighting for his party's nomination.

And while opinion polls showed that inflation was the major concern of most people, he concentrated much of his fire on U.S. unemployment, running close to eight per cent.

Wallace joined enemy — Maddox

ATLANTA (UPI) — American Independent Party presidential candidate Lester Maddox, glumly watching Jimmy Carter roll up southern votes, said Tuesday night the outcome might have been different if George Wallace hadn't "joined the enemy."

Maddox and his wife, Virginia, joined about two-dozen supporters in an uncrowded hotel meeting room, strolling among three television sets that reported Carter and President Ford's votes in the tens of millions. By late evening, Maddox had less than 60,000 votes in the 19 states where he was on the ballot and had won no electoral votes.

"It'd about as I anticipated after I found out that we were not going to get any finance anywhere within the nation," said Maddox.

Massachusetts rejects handgun ban proposal

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts voters Tuesday rejected the first statewide ban on handguns proposed in the United States.

Partial returns showed the proposal going down to defeat by a three-to-two margin.

The proposed ban would have outlawed private possession of weapons with barrels of less than 16 inches. Police patrolman's associations opposed the measure, while liberal police chiefs such as Boston's Robert Digrazia endorsed it.

Backers of the proposal argued it would cost $45 million to buy back an estimated 500,000 handguns licensed in the state since 1968. Opponents had argued it would cost $125 million to repay gun owners for up to one million handguns believed in circulation among Massachusetts six million citizens.

Your Good Health

By G. C. THOSTESON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can a doctor tell if a baby at birth is a month premature? Is a healthy baby fully developed at eight months? Can a woman have a ten-month baby? — J. A.

Prematurity is not a matter of time but of the size of the baby. The standard for prematurity is when the weight is less than 5 pounds, 8 ounces, with length not over 18½ inches. That is regardless of the amount of time the mother has been pregnant. In short, a baby can be called premature and be full term or nearly so.

A normal baby is usually fully developed at eight months. At seven months, its viability (the ability to live outside the uterus) is threatened. However, today this threat has lessened considerably because of advances in care of "preemies." I know of one recent case where a bowel obstruction correction was made on a pound an half newborn.

Women have had babies at ten months, but sometimes the timing is based on a miscalculation of the last menstrual period before conception.

Physicians can evaluate the newborn's maturity quite closely by its length, breathing, skin appearance and general behavior. There is also a blood test which determines the level of a certain hormone found in the placenta. This can predict things pretty closely.

containing a considerable number of new Canadians, who have threatened to vote against the Liberals if changes were not made in application of the law.

In nearby St. Jerome, Parti Quebecois leader Rene Levesque said on an open-line radio show the Liberal party was being threatened with "electoral blackmail" by ethnic voters and feared losing some Montreal-area ridings.

"It's the worst way to change laws in the midst of an election campaign."

Union Nationale leader Rodrigue Biron denounced the mid-election policy change as proof of Bourassa's "opportunism" and said the move "showed a flagrant lack of seriousness."

Former federal cabinet minister Bryce Mackasey, running for the Liberals in the predominantly English riding of Notre Dame de Grace, said he "did not, as has been suggested, force Mr. Bourassa to make changes," Mackasey, who has publicly called for modifications to the law since switching to provincial politics.

Governorships change hands regardless of battle of giants

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrat Jay Rockefeller wrested the West Virginia governorship from the Republicans Tuesday but in Illinois Republican James Thompson was elected to replace a Democrat.

Republicans took back the Vermont governorship when Richard Snelling defeated state treasurer Stella Hackel, who hoped to suucceed fellow Democrat Thomas Salmon as Governor.

Democrats won re-election in Arkansas and retained the governorship in Rhode Island, while an incumbent Republican governor swept to easy victory in Indiana.

The switches came as Democrats and Republicans fought to a near standoff in 14 gubernatorial elections that seemed little affected by the race between President Ford and Jimmy Carter.

In the Illinois contest, Thompson, a former U.S. attorney, defeated secretary of state Michael Howlett, who was Chicago mayor Richard Daley's hand-picked candidate. Howlett had defeated Gov. Dan Walker in the primary.

Rockefeller, 39, will succeed Republican Gov. Arch Moore, who was prohibited by law from running again.

Rockefeller, who lost when he first ran for governor in 1972, won an easy victory over former Republican Gov. Cecil Underwood.

North Carolina's governorship returned to Democratic hands as Lieutenant-Governor James Hunt beat Republican David Flaherty. The incumbent, Republican James Holshouser, also was barred from seeking re-election.

A Republican incumbent, Otis Bowen, swept to an early victory in Indiana by soundly defeating Democratic secretary of state Larry Conrad, but Bowen's win was expected and failed to dampen Democratic hopes elsewhere.

Democratic hopes of unseating New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson, one of the nation's most conservative chief executives, began to fade when he took an early lead over Democrat Harry Spanos.

200-mile limit east and west

Canada sets fish area

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada has staked out gigantic swaths of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans to be brought under a 200-mile fisheries limit, details of a cabinet order released Tuesday show.

The order gives 60 days' notice of the establishment of 200-mile limits off the East and West Coast Jan. 1.

External affairs officials also announced the fisheries limit in the Arctic would be extended to 200 miles March 1.

Officials said at a news conference the new extension of fisheries jurisdiction to 200 miles from 12 miles Jan. 1, will bring 502,000 square miles of the Atlantic and 128,000 square miles of the Pacific under Canadian control.

The extensions set out the maximum territory Canada wants control of subject to negotiations with the United States, France and Denmark on areas where Canadian boundaries would conflict with those of the other countries.

Canada seeks interim arrangements with the three countries for fishing in boundary areas while final solutions are worked out, officials said.

Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc and then-external affairs minister Allan MacEachen announced June 4 that Canada would have the 200-mile limit by Jan. 1, joining the United States, Mexico and a host of European countries which have made or will make similar extensions.

The main impetus was the need to control large-scale off-shore fishing by foreign fleets that were drying up fish stocks and threatening the livelihood of coastal communities.

Foreign fishermen will have to be licensed by Canada and will be allocated fish surplus to Canadian catching capacity under quotas aimed at allowing fish stocks to increase from their low levels.

The external affairs and fisheries departments have been working towards the 200-mile limit by obtaining bilateral agreements with major fishing nations.

The agreements amount to virtual recognition of the 200-mile limit and allow other countries a say in Atlantic fishing rules for 1977.

A fisheries official told reporters the government is "expecting a smooth transition in 1977 because of the bilateral agreements."

He also said that fishing nations have responded to requests for their 1977 fishing plans under reduced quotas. Fisheries "was happy with the plans" that would be the basis for the licensing of foreign vessels.

The licences will be for specific fisheries and will expire as soon as the vessel's national quota is filled. The number of vessels per country will be tied to the quota.

External officials said they could not reveal what progress had been made in talks on boundary areas.

The proposed limit encompasses all of St. Pierre-Miquelon, the French islands off southern Newfoundland. France is considering a 200-mile economic zone around the islands. St. Pierre fishermen already have some fishing rights in East Coast waters.

This will have to be negotiated along with the boundary through Baffin Bay between Canada and Greenland.

But the Canadian claims in boundary waters with the U.S. could cause the greatest furore. They include much of the Georges Bank area off southern Nova Scotia that the Americans also claim.

They also take in large tracts of water off the Strait of Juan de Fuca between British Columbia and Washington State and the Dixon Entrance between B.C. and Alaska.

Shoplifting spree in B.C., Alberta to stock boutique

VANCOUVER (CP) — Police said Tuesday that a highly-organized shoplifting ring suspected of stealing $50,000 worth of women's clothing in British Columbia and Alberta during the past month has been broken.

Police staged a series of raids Tuesday in Vancouver's west end, seizing a large quantity of goods and arresting a 36-year-old man and three women aged 30, 27 and 19. No charges had yet been laid and names were not released.

The raids came after a two-month investigation headed by the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit, the Vancouver police and RCMP in North Vancouver, Richmond and Burnaby.

Police said the bulk of the stolen apparel was to be used to stock a boutique near English Bay in Vancouver.

They said that women, working in pairs, shoplifted from women's wear stores in the Vancouver area, and that in September, members of the ring conducted a shoplifting tour through the Okanagan, Banff, Calgary, Edmonton, Medicine Hat and other Prairie centres.

Most of the articles of expensive clothing have been recovered.

'Let public decide on telegraph'

OTTAWA (CP) — Rail union leaders pressed the government Tuesday for public hearings on whether the public still wants the telegraph service — a service these unions say is already being lost by default.

And E. G. Abbot, executive secretary of the Canadian Railway Labor Association said Tuesday the unions wanted further closings of telegraph offices halted until the public hearings were held.

But Abbot indicated the union leaders came away from a Tuesday afternoon meeting with Communications Minister Jeanne Sauve virtually empty-handed.

The minister remarked that she could not direct the Canadian Radio-television and Tele-communications Commission to hold the hearings though she might mention the issue to the commission, Abbot said.

Adventurer rows to Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP) — Patrick Quesnel, a 27-year-old adventurer from Washington State who did it because he believes in himself, stroked into the small dock at a suburban marina near here Tuesday, apparently the first man ever to row a boat from the West Coast to Hawaii.

It took Quesnel, a commercial fisherman from Vaughn, Wash., 111 days of solitude to make the 2,200-mile crossing in his 22-foot Grand Banks dory.

"Basically, I'm a doer instead of a leader," said the husky, bearded Quesnel in telling why he decided seven years ago he would make the voyage.

After leaving La Push, Wash., July 14, Quesnel said he went south along the coast until he picked up the trade winds off Baja, Mexico.

"Once it got into the trades off Baja," he said, "it was downhill all the way."

Inmates protesting system

Head of prisons hopes for reason

OTTAWA (CP) — The commissioner of penitentiaries said Tuesday that rioting and hostage-taking prisoners were protesting the entire prison and criminal justice system, not just conditions behind bars.

Andre Therrien said this new attitude has appeared in the last six months in such places as British Columbia penitentiary and St. Vincent de Paul in Quebec.

He added that there was little he can do to overcome such protests — that his job simply is administrator of a prison system that society demands.

He said he hoped the majority of prisoners will be reasonable and not press demands that the penitentiary system cannot answer.

Therrien was testifying before the first working meeting of the Commons subcommittee on penitentiaries which will investigate all aspects of the system and travel the country talking with guards and prisoners.

He later expanded on some of his remarks to reporters.

The commissioner said that while it was important the penitentiary service have new institutions to replace the old walled fortresses where riots and unrest had been occurring frequently, his most important priority must be his "people problem."

He must re-establish communication with penitentiary staff which has suffered from large growth, turnover and change in the system in the last 15 years.

In that connection he rejected charges from the correctional staff union that he was seeking total confrontation. He said he believed strongly in consultation.

As the committee prepared to go full steam ahead in an investigation that will extend well into next year, the commissioner raised these points:

- In future, maximum security prisoners will be segregated into groups of 12 to 18 for better control.
- The service is looking forward to having special holding units, super-maximum parts of penitentiaries where dangerous prisoners could live apart from others working and playing there.
- Other special areas will be created for sexual offenders, stool pigeons and others who require protection from harm caused by other prisoners. Finding a way to do this was a problem.
- There is a need for creation of employment in prisons because there is too much idle time. If this is not found, problems will continue.

Mother compensated after daughter's rape

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 38-year-old Lower Mainland woman who was forced to watch the rape of her daughter has been awarded $1,007 by the Workers' Compensation Board for mental anguish she suffered.

The award is among 36, totalling $107,689, given crime victims under the criminal injuries compensation act during September.

A knife-wielding man forced his way into the woman's house and raped the daughter in her presence. The board does not make public names of those who receive awards.

Four rape victims also received awards ranging from $1,500 to $3,556.

A 49-year-old Vancouver woman beaten in a parking lot and left with permanent brain damage received the maximum award of a lump sum payment of $7,500 and a lifetime pension of $345 a month, to be administered on her behalf.

Two Prince George children of a man who shot and killed his 26-year-old estranged wife were awarded $50 a month each, to be administered by a public trustee.

Other large awards included $13,118 for wage loss and permanent hand and elbow injuries to an Interior woman beaten with a club by a male intruder, $12,029 to a Prince George man who suffered hearing loss in a scuffle, and $10,000 to a Vancouver man beaten and robbed in his hotel room.

Transit costs

THE NEWLY ANNOUNCED increase in bus fares is reasonable in view of the length of time since the last boost and the fact that children, students and the elderly will escape it.

It may be a little difficult to grasp why the general fares should be raised when the increase of 10 cents is expected to bring in only an additional $6 million annually compared with an anticipated rise in the urban transit deficit this year of about $10 million, and when it is still important for B.C. Hydro to continue the effort to persuade people to use buses instead of their own cars.

But Hydro's thinking apparently is that this represents a middle course between charging say 50 cents, which would discourage many from using the bus service and would be a hardship on those without alternative transportation, and delaying the increase and making still higher fares more urgent. It is noteworthy that at 25 cents, Hydro reckons it has been losing 40 cents for every bus ride.

It should be noted too, however, that the power authority obviously is looking forward to payment of a provincial transit subsidy beyond the normal $2 million. In the last fiscal year the loss on urban transit operations was $36.6 million, which would have resulted in a deficit for the whole of Hydro had not the provincial government contributed a special, supposedly one-time-only, subsidy of $32.6 million, allowing the corporation to show a net income of $1.3 million.

Because the operation of efficient and attractive public transportatin services is vital to Greater Vancouver and Greater Victoria, there may be some merit in the suggestion of the chairman of the Capital Region Board, James Campbell, that the time has come for the province to take over the transit system and permit Hydro to concentrate on the provision of power.

But in view of the anticipated deficit even with higher fares, Mr. Campbell's further proposal that the government should sell the system to the municipalities on mutually agreeable terms needs to be treated with caution.

The first consideration would have to be whether mutually agreeable terms could be found. And with the transit loss already high and increasing, according to Hydro chairman Robert Bonner, at about $13 million a year, municipal taxpayers might well have their doubts.

No room for complacency

FOR THE FIRST TIME in history, we are told, the world is experiencing a decline in the population growth rate. No longer is a gradual increase being recorded in the number of new-born and no longer is a doubling of the four billion people on earth anticipated by the turn of the century.

The source of this information is the Worldwatch Institute, an independent non-profit research organization founded "to identify and focus attention on global problems." It works out of Washington, D.C., and is partially financed by the United Nations.

In a report from the UN last week it confirms much of what it was talking about seven months ago when it issued a paper titled Twenty Two Dimensions of the Population Problem which was written in collaboration with the Population Institute of New York. It said then that the world's population was not likely to double over the next generation: "Current population growth rates cannot continue for much longer. Birth rates will come down, death rates will go up, or more likely both will occur."

This is what is happening, the institute says now, pointing to food scarcity in some of the poorer countries like India and Bangladesh resulting in millions of "additional and avoidable" deaths.

Some encouragement can be felt from the fact that much of the slowing of the population growth is attributable to a widening of family planning services and a growing desire to use them. But this other "assist" is intolerable and the institute's Twenty Two Dimensions paper warns of other factors that can contribute to additional lowering of the rate of growth.

There are at least 22 dimensions of human society, including jobs, inflation, food supply, climate and forests which are feeling the impact of the size of the population as it now stands.

At four billion people there are critical pressure issues. Some indicators listed are: almost one billion new jobs will be required in developing countries between now and the year 2000, but few such countries have the necessary investment capital; illiteracy is increasing from 700 million adult illiterates in 1950 to 800 million now; the world receives 200,000 new consumers, babies who will have needs, each day; farmers cannot expand the supply of cereals enough to meet world demand; national parks are under increasing pressure by ever expanding use, and abuse, and in Africa "parks and game preserves have been sacrificed to the fierce demand for farm land which is needed to feed burgeoning populations."

The population problem concerns us, says the paper. But it will concern our children and grandchildren even more. "How we respond to the population threat may do more to shake the world in which they will live than anything else we do."

Increasing nutritional stress, environmentally induced illness, and social disintegration can all contribute to rising death rates and falling birth rates.

Susi and Chuma coming into their own

Back seat for Dr. Livingstone

By DAVID MARTIN, the London Observer
from Lusaka, Africa

For a century, children in schools throughout the world — including Africa during the colonial era — have been taught that the explorer, Dr. David Livingstone, discovered Victoria Falls.

But today in independent black Africa, the children are being taught that Livingstone did not discover the mighty falls, he was simply the first European to see them.

Now Tanzania has decided to take the rewriting of African history a step further. Livingstone is a legend, but few people have ever heard of two Africans named Susi and Chuma.

The Tanzanian government recently announced that it was establishing a one-year research project to ascertain the part played in the "discovery" of Africa by Susi and Chuma.

When Livingstone died in northwest Zambia near Lake Bangweulu on May 1, 1873, the two Africans were with him.

Eight months earlier he had set out from the northern Tanzanian town of Tabora in search of the source of the Nile. He had travelled 500 miles southwest in almost exactly the wrong direction. The source of the Nile is 400 miles due north of Tabora at the town of Jinja in Uganda on the shore of Lake Victoria.

In late April, 1873, Livingstone was desperately ill with fever. He was so weak that he was carried on a litter to the village of Chief Chitambo. There he died and his servants found him in his hut kneeling across his bed in prayer.

Susi and Chuma cut out Livingstone's heart and viscera and buried them where he died. Then they dried his body in the sun for two weeks, wrapped it in calico, the bark of a tree, and sailcloth, which was tied to a pole so the two men could carry it.

They set out on a torturous 1,000-mile journey to carry Livingstone's body to the Indian Ocean port of Bagamoyo opposite the island of Zanzibar, where he had fitted out his last journey.

"However often the story is told of Susi's and Chuma's journey to the coast with Livingston's body it remains incredible, and perhaps it was a miracle of a kind, since such devotion among primitive and uneducated men can hardly have been inspired by any ordinary emotion," author Alan Moorehead notes in his book, "The White Nile."

Susi and Chuma, and other servants who had remained loyal, faced incredible hazards in their journey, passing through areas inhabited by hostile tribes.

Two expeditions had been sent from England to search for Livingstone. At Tabora in October 1873 they met one party led by naval officer Lovett Cameron. But he went on to Ujiji to salvage some of Livingstone's papers and emerged on the African Atlantic coast two years later.

(The last white man to see Livingstone alive had been Henry M. Stanley of The New York Herald, who had greeted the explorer in November 1871 with the words: "Dr. Livingstone, I presume.")

Susi and Chuma carried on to the Indian Ocean and arrived at Bagamoyo on Feb. 15, 1874, almost a year after Livingstone's death.

The explorer's last resting place on the African continent was in a shed at Bagamoyo's Catholic cathedral. Today the shed is a bicycle store.

The British warship HMS Vulture was waiting to take Livingstone's body to Zanzibar and then on to Britain. A special train was waiting at the port to take the body to London for burial at Westminster Abbey.

The epitaph in brass lettering on gray stone at his grave reads: "Brought by faithful hands over land and sea, here rests David Livingstone, missionary, traveller, philanthropist, born March 19, 1813, at Blantyre, Lanarkshire, died May 1, 1873, at Chitambo's village, Ulala."

Those faithful hands who carried his body 1,000 miles were forgotten. Vaguely, Moorehead says that one of the two Africans may have accompanied Livingstone's body to England. And Susi was said to have been baptized with the name David after the explorer's death.

Susi and Chuma apparently travelled with Livingstone on a number of his journeys. Hitherto they have been described as mere porters or "faithful servants." But did Livingstone's guides really play a prominent role in the discoveries normally attributed to the great explorer?

"In this project, we will try to find out the basis of Susi's and Chuma's loyalty to Livingstone and what motivated them to perform that epic act of carrying his dead body a thousand miles without tiring to the coast, the problems they experienced on the way, and what we can as Africans learn from their story," said Maj. Gen. Sam Sarakikya, Tanzania's minister of national culture and youth.

The Tanzanians are not intent on debunking the Livingstone legend; on the contrary, their research in Africa and in Britain could well enhance the legend by adding additional information.

But what they are intent on doing is showing the role in history played by men like Susi and Chuma, which hitherto has been ignored in the history books written by Europeans.

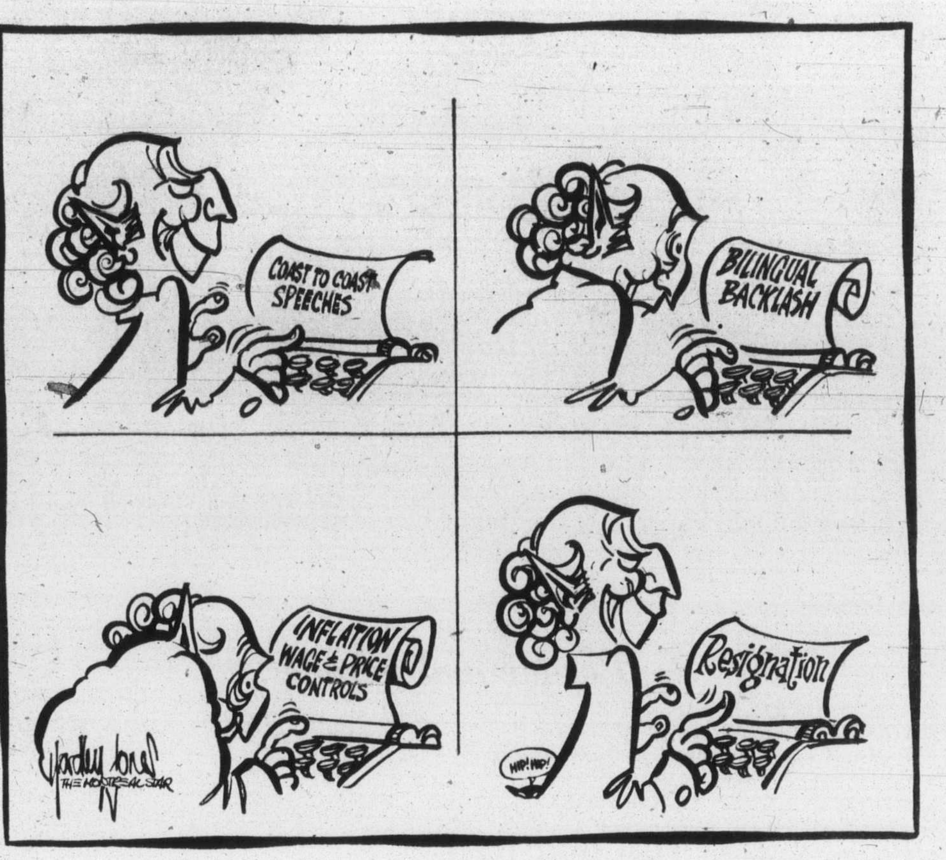
"By "us" do you mean us or the human race?"



Levesque on separatism

Full circle convolution

By PAUL HELLYER from Ottawa

From a showbiz point of view, the recent Bourassa-Levesque debate had it all over the U.S. presidential exchanges. Perhaps the radio medium creates less tension and makes personalities more important than the hairstyles.

The Pequiste leader pressed hard on economic issues and the alleged bungling of Quebec's affairs. He cited the cost of servicing the public debt, the huge deficit, high unemployment, the James Bay cost escalation and the Olympic bailout as examples.

The premier, well armed with copious statistics and ready-made answers, argued that the cost of servicing Quebec's debt was modest compared to other provinces — the over-run in James Bay costs is normal for projects of its nature and scope — many new jobs have been created since the last election and provincial intervention saved the Olympic Games.

Concerning Levesque's allegations of scandal, Bourassa repeatedly demanded the name of one minister, date or set of facts implicating the government. It was a case of put up or shut up.

Levesque side-stepped the issue by referring to party officials, etc. Either he didn't have the facts to back up his allegations or he is saving them until he can see the whites of the government's eyes.

When the contenders began to discuss the merits of federalism versus separatism, they sounded like two doctors differing as to whether it would be better to remove someone's stomach or just cut out the ulcers with deep surgery.

Bourassa described his idea of federalism as including cultural sovereignty for Quebec with a continued economic relationship with the rest of Canada. Stripped of all its foliage, that really means associate status — unless Ottawa abdicates cultural matters in favor of all the provinces and adheres exclusively to economics.

Levesque, on the other hand, would start with an independent Quebec and then try to work out a form of association based on the European model.

What he didn't say was that the architects of the EEC, which began as a Common Market, hoped that it would lead not just to monetary union (a common currency) but, ultimately, to federation — a kind of United States of Europe.

If that's Levesque's concept, why go through the turmoil and agony of separation to embark on a course which might, in time, lead to a solution not too different from the point of departure? The French have a saying for this kind of full circle convolution: Plus ca change, plus ca reste la meme chose.

By consensus, Levesque won the debate. But Bourassa performed surprisingly well — his ability to hold his own with the charismatic challenger had been underrated.

The whole country is watching this contest with more than passing interest because a smashing separatist success would further undermine Prime Minister Trudeau's position federally.

Watching from the sidelines, one senses that not just the fate of the Bourassa and Trudeau governments may be at stake — as the future of Canada be decided.

That is not to suggest that a Bourassa victory would settle the issue of separatism for all time. It wouldn't. That was a mistake many commentators made after the Liberal landslide in 1972. Separatism is a living reality that won't just curl up and go away. The question to be decided on November 15 is whether we will have a little more time to develop new strategies and try new initiatives or whether it is already later than we think.

That burned-out bulb

By RICHARD JACKSON

Let us hope that Walter Rudnicki, your untypical bureaucratic rebel, is not forever lost to the federal public service.

For he still remains — with no visible rivals or challengers — one of the greatest unsung champions of the taxpayers in all public service ranks.

He stands as a defender of the public purse in his own very special way.

Through his stubborn refusal to conform to the accepted bureaucratic system and proceed through approved channels, he saved — and continues saving — the taxpayers an amount which by now has to be mounting into the who-knows-how-many-millions of dollars.

That was nearly 11 years ago.

And since then he has pursued his unorthodox course leading to his dismissal in 1973 from his $37,000 position at Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for making available to "outsiders" — the Metis leaders directly concerned — what CMHC President William Teron claimed was a confidential departmental document.

He won a judicial award of $18,000 for wrongful dismissal, took a comparable position with the Manitoba government, and is currently negotiating to return to the federal fold.

His application for reinstatement has involved Prime Minister Trudeau, Privy Council Clerk Michael Pitfield and Urban Affairs Minister Barney Danson, and given rise to charges and countercharges of "blacklisting" with Walter Rudnicki, of course, the heart of the matter.

But he seems always to have been somewhere near the centre of the action ever since a day in November of 1965 when an electric light bulb burned out in the office he occupied as the then Director of Planning of the Indian Affairs Branch of the Citizenship and Immigration Department. It was in a new building rented by the government, as many in Ottawa are, from private developers who build them on borrowed money secured by signed-in-advance long-term federal leases.

Who was going to pay for the new bulb — worth 50 cents — the developer-landlord or the government tenant?

Big question.

A patient man and a public servant of enough years to know the immutable, unchanged and unchanging ways of the Big Bureaucracy, he well understood that he must allow "a reasonable time" for the question to go through proper channels for an answer.

Six dark winter weeks gloomed by.

Then, with reckless abandon, Walter Rudnicki brought in a couple of candles, and sent out a few letters.

In a few days, strangers in coveralls arrived to survey the situation.

And that was it until the then public works minister and now senator George McIlraith, ever the practical political red tape-cutter and channel-jumper heard about it.

Whatinhell was going on, he asked, that getting a replacement for a light bulb should be as complicated as negotiating a federal-provincial tax deal.

They told him that they were still arguing as to who should pay, landlord or tenant.

And he told them to knock off the talk, get a bulb, a ladder and a Public Works maintenance man, fix the light, and then continue the argument to the point of settlement.

And that they did.

Trivial argument over a nothing issue?

No indeed. Actually a big deal.

Because from that day forward, when Walter Rudnicki snuffed out his candles and turned on the light, Public Works, when signing leases for rental office space, wrote in a clause specifying that the developer-landlord would pay for what's known in the trade as "relamping," while the government would pay the power bill.

Big deal because a peek into the current federal Estimates discloses that the government is paying an annual $171,250,000 for rental accommodation including new bulbs, since "Captain George," as the Senator was then known by one and all, laid down the law on "relamping."

As he said at the time, it covered "onehellofalot of bulbs."

To be exact, $252,393 worth of them, the last time such an item-by-item maintenance tabulation could be unearthed in the Public Works accounts.

And more, much more every year as the government rents increasing acreage of office accommodation, up from $101,394,000 only two years ago to the current $171 million-plus.

Thank you, Walter Rudnicki, and Captain George, too.

Gorde Hunter

MANY YEARS AGO there was a big art show competition in Winnipeg. All forms of art were accepted for the competition and the Winnipeg Tribune decided to enter a painting. Went out and got an artist, the painting was done in due course and entered.

And won — first prize and the Tribune trumpeted the victory across their news pages. Also made known the identity of the artist — a monkey.

That's right, a monkey and the embarrassment to the art show judges was excruciating. The winning piece of abstract art produced by a monkey. Therefore it comes as no surprise that a group of art judges voted an all-black painting the winner of the 26th annual Vancouver Island jury show.

The whole canvas was covered in black paint — that's it — and it won.

One of the jurors, Gathie Falk, said she had no explanation of the black painting "for those who do not readily comprehend them."

She added "you just have to keep looking."

The producing of a plain black panel can not really be described as artistic endeavor. It can be described as a giant put-on, a put-on that somehow or other does con art "experts" into a passionate embrace of mediocrity.

There was the "giant" of the Fifties, Jackson Pollock, who became the darling of the abstract set.

Pollock would put a canvas on the floor, walk around it dribbling paint on it, or he would stand on a ladder and let the paint spatter on the canvas from great heights. The art "critics" hailed his work as the work of a master and the avant garde bought his paintings by the carload. Today, long after his death, Pollock paintings — the ones spattered from great heights — sell for $50,000 and more.

Honest-to-goodness serious artists, the people with real artistic talent, decry the Pollocks — as well they should. Just as we should laugh at the all black canvases that win art show awards . . .

I HAVE WRITTEN before on the work done by the Victoria Rape Relief centre. I thought then, as I think now, that the centre offers an invaluable aid to those defiled by lustful cowards.

I also decry much of the money spent on many Local Initiative Program ventures. But to think that this worthwhile local program was turned down for a L.I.P. grant, is nothing more or less than tragic.

Rape Relief applied for a grant of $20,400 and was turned down. The money would have been spent on a public information program designed to advise how to prevent attacks and of what action should be taken in the event of rape.

This particular group has had strong success and it is indeed true that many, including police officers, have gone to Rape Relief for vital information. The need of such a service is without question and the past success of the program is there for all to see.

We blow millions on largely inconsequential or cosmetic undertakings in this country, yet can not find a lousy $20,400 to continue or further a needed operation. Local MPs should be screaming their loudest over the stupid ommision . . .

NOW THAT CANADIAN Freehold Properties has won the battle of Laurel Point with the City of Victoria, can there be any lingering doubt that Victoria City Council was "had" in the original negotiations?

The original agreement, which obviously contained loopholes beneficial to Canadian Freehold, called for an eight-storey 199-room hotel and convention facility. Now, because of the loopholes, the project will be a four-storey, 127 room hotel, with "modest" convention facilities.

The City of Victoria blew it, no mistaking that, but because of the contract-making ineptitude, at least we will be spared four storeys of harbor area despoilment — and that is a plus no matter how you count it.

In future, however, let us hope City Council will make absolutely sure on any land-use contract entered into with private building concerns . . .

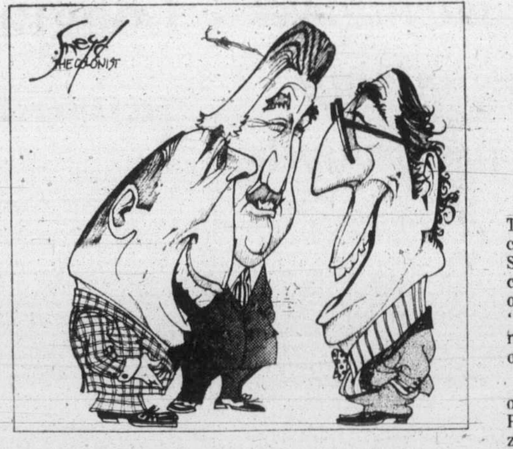
I DO NOT WISH to encroach on Jim Tang's sporting domain, but I am surprised by the number of calls I have received about the early demise (what else is new?) of the B.C. Lions football club. What can be done, they ask? Let's face it, football fans, the B.C. Lions might well be the worst-run sports organization in all of Canada. Has been for many years, and the loss again this year is bound to approach a quarter of a million dollars. I swipe Tang's suggestion — because it is a good one. Sell the team to private interests, clean out the whole mess and start over again — including the name. Maybe then, and only then, fan interest will be revived. Right now there is no fan interest to speak of and if they draw 15,000 to their final league game against Winnipeg, I'll be very surprised. Imagine, a picayune crowd of 15,000 in the third largest city in Canada.



"But even if we could follow China's example and rid the government of undesirable politicians, who'd be left to run the country?"

To Health Minister Robert McClelland:

In my early life I was very susceptible to colds and flu until in 1961, I began to have annual influenza innoculations which gave me a degree of immunity. Since marriage, I have ensured that my wife and now my children have also had these shots. In the past, they have been readily available either through my employment or through the family physician.

Now, in 1976, both the federal and provincial governments have stepped into the act with the advent of a feared epidemic. The result has been that influenza vaccine is no longer available to my family.

The swine flu dosage is to be issued only to people over 65 years or other persons who are chronically ill. Neither condition applied to us.

The ordinary garden variety vaccine is no longer being produced. I have attempted to obtain shots from our family physician, the Saanich health clinic and from McGill and Orme, pharmacists. All say they will not be able to assist my wife, my children or myself in this current year.

It seems to me that this is another example of governmental bungling and interference in private enterprise with the results that many more people may contact the flu this year than in any other year since innoculations have been available.

Know-how

Arab agents deplore the plight of Arabs living in Israeli-controlled areas. But for years, a long line-up of Arabs coming from every Mideast country wind up in Israel for medical treatment. In the past few months, 7,000 Lebanese passed through the "open fence" border for varied help from Israel.

Since 1967, 4.5 million people crossed the Jordan bridges, including 700,000 Arab tourists. They saw how the standard of living of Arab citizens in Israel far surpasses that of most Arab countries.

If only Israel were granted peace, her know-how would be used to help relieve the horrible misery of millions of Arab neighbors.

Planning

At this time, Communities United for Action wishes to take the opportunity to share with council some ideas arising out of recent decisions by council and the Community Plan Hearing of Oct. 12, 1976.

Firstly, CUFA applauds council's decision to introduce down-zoning bylaws for certain areas of Victoria. It is felt that initiative in this regard is a welcome sign that council is now very much more aware of the problems of development in older, well-established neighborhoods. Our hope is that council will continue on this course and introduce more down-zoning, particularly CUFA's proposed immediate down-zoning of the neighborhoods as a temporary control mechanism.

Secondly, CUFA would like to express its firm support of Mayor Young's public statement at the Oct. 12 hearing that the neighborhoods should now be included in the actual formulation of community development plans. As a corollary of this expression of our approval, CUFA wishes officially to make the following requests:

(a) — That council initiate neighborhood workshops at the community meeting level so that local residents may make their contribution to the restructuring of the Official Community Plan. This would strengthen the concept of neighborhood plans as being well-designed policy statements for future development.

(b) — That council give further serious thought to the idea that the Official Community Plan should include the detailed recommendations of the neighborhood plans (e.g., land-use maps), thereby providing specific guidelines for all those who may be involved in the planning and development of Victoria's communities.

Finally, CUFA expresses the hope that the registration of the Official Community Plan will be postponed until such time as all residents of the Municipality of Victoria have had an opportunity to "read and inwardly digest" the policies outlined therein. To this end, CUFA hopes that, through the agency of Victoria's newspapers, a free copy of the Official Community Plan can be made available to all citizens of Victoria — a suggestion that has already been made by certain aldermen.

By LES PAYNE of Newsday from Cape Town, South Africa

The new prime minister of Transkei often compares his country's independence from South Africa with a man who cannot swim crossing the river on the back of a devil who can. "Once I get across," says the man in his story, "I will strike out on my own."

Many Africans within and outside of Transkei say that Prime Minister Kaiser Matanzina will not be able to break his country away from South Africa soon or easily — particularly because it has not been officially recognized by the United Nations or most other individual nations, including its African neighbors.

Opponents of Transkei's independence maintain that it is a sham and that the economic umbilical cord stretching from Pretoria to the Transkei capital of Umtata may never be broken. They say that Matanzina should have refused the independence offer under South Africa's separate-development scheme, a plan that eventually would assign that country's 80 per cent black population to nine homeland areas comprising only 13 per cent of the land. They argue that all black inhabitants of South Africa should fight for a larger share of the country's land and economy.

One observer said that Matanzima's position on a national level resembles that of Booker T. Washington's in the United States near the turn of the century when he accepted the creation of black "independent" trade schools instead of the desegregation of white universities. In the Atlanta Compromise, Washington urged blacks to forego competition with whites for college education and top jobs; instead, he called for them to set up separate vocational schools that would prepare them for menial jobs. "Cast down your buckets where you are," Washington said. In a somewhat similar vein, Matanzima says the independent homelands should "remove from whites the fear that a better deal for blacks in any field, particularly in politics and economics, threatens the existence of the whites as a group."

"Transkei independence is a triumph for the Republic of South Africa," says Knowledge Gazana, the most respected opposition leader in Transkei. "It is the best argument yet to justify racial separation. South Africa's program of separate development and apartheid are one and the same. If K.D. (Matanzima) had refused independence, we would be back in square one opposing apartheid."

Unlike their governments, which have refused to recognize Transkei, overseas business firms are eager to invest in the new country. There are ample incentives: Low-interest loans are readily available, and labor union are non-existent; the minimum wage in industry is $55 a month; there is no corporate tax for the first 10 years of operation, and new firms in Transkei would receive 10-year operating contracts granted and guaranteed by South Africa.

"We've got investments coming out of our ears," said Frank Maritz, managing director of the Transkei Development Corporation, which employs 410 white managers and supervises some 8,000 blacks. "We have offers from Israel, Germany, Italy and France. Japan and Hong Kong are also interested in investing in Transkei."

There are no direct U.S. investments in Transkei, but some American firms have ties like those of the Holiday Inn in Umtata, whose building is owned by the development corporation but whose operational costs and profits are shared 50-50 with the local organization. Other offers have come from a French firm that wants to create a hydroelectric company, and a German electronics firm that envisions the establishment of a television industry.

"I know Matanzima had said that he would accept aid from Russia and China," Maritz says, "but I know his feelings on this. He is a capitalist; he abhors communists as much as he abhors apartheid." Matanzima, unlike his critics, distinguishes between separate development, which granted him a homeland, and apartheid. He labels the idea of black integration into the republic's economy and body politic as "pure pie in the sky." Transkei, he says had too much to lose — "many dams, schools, roads, a majority black civil service, a stable black government" — to risk a "bloody revolution." He maintains that the only political revolution possible is "within the framework of separate development laid down by the South African government."

Nevertheless, the prime minister opposes apartheid insofar as it separates the races within a country. "We utterly reject racial discrimination, which has been characteristic of so much that is South Africa," he said in his inaugural speech.

The new government has taken a tough and independent public stance, sometimes critical of Pretoria, since its inception last week. Matanzima has said he would accept aid from China and Russia, "provided that no strings are attached." Moreover, the 10,000 whites living in Transkei will be allowed to own land only if they accept citizenship. "If the republic government says that black people can't acquire land in the white republic, why should white people be able to acquire property in Transkei?" he asked. The Transkei government also plans to repeal all South African racial laws, including a ban on intermarriage.

But Transkei's promise of changes, opponents say, will not erase the reality of the new country's almost total dependence on South Africa. South African whites run Transkei's railroads, manage its civil service, supervise its finances, operate its postal and communication systems and command its small army of 300 men. The most critical aspects of the new country's development are its industrial and agricultural growth — which also are in the hands of South African whites.

Though business offers continue to pour in, the Transkei government is embarrassed by world criticism of its new independence. Not a single country sent a representative to recognize the independence ceremony last Tuesday. Even Africans boycotted the affair.

However, many Transkei residents are willing to await further developments. "It is all Matanzima's show now," one politician said.

"Kaiser is an egoist," said Gazana. "He wants to be bull of the show. I'm sure that he is a soldier dressed up in camouflage clothing. I think that he wants South Africa to fall into the hands of blacks. I think Matanzima is a black nationalist."

Many Lebanese emigres display 'vulgar' wealth

By JOE ALEX MORRIS Jr. from Nicosia
The Los Angeles Times

Somehow, they don't quite fit the usual description of refugees. Many of the women are gowned by Dior, even for casual lunches. The men puff on Cuban cigars and wear ostentatious gold wristwatches.

They tend to drive big, chrome-laden cars. They gravitate to the best watering places, the Hilton here, the Caravelle in Athens, and even posher establishments in Paris, London and New York.

This description certainly does not fit all the hundreds of thousands of Lebanese who have fled their homeland during the year and a half of civil war. But these are the most obvious among them — not the poor and downtrodden but the middle and upper classes.

Because they had money, these select Lebanese emigres at first were welcomed, particularly here in Cyprus, a divided island whose economy was badly hurt by the Turkish invasion and occupation of 40 per cent of the land in 1974.

But the Lebanese monied class has always displayed its wealth, often to vulgar extremes, and it has cost them the sympathy usually accorded to people forced to flee their homeland.

Greek Cypriots mutter about the big cars on their narrow roads, driven by Lebanese in a free-wheeling style which often means ignoring all the rules. Others resent the fact that the Hilton pool is overcrowded with Lebanese mothers and their sometimes badly disciplined children, whom they lecture in a polyglot of French, Arabic, and English — often all three in a single sentence.

Here as elsewhere, the abrasions caused by the mass influx from Lebanon, of both Lebanese and foreigners, are slowly building up. Figures are hard to come by, but it is likely that one Lebanese in every three or four has left his homeland — close to a million people.

By far the greatest number went to neighboring Syria. It was the easiest to reach, many had relatives there, and it was relatively cheap, making their money go further.

The Syrians say they have some 500,000 Lebanese refugees. Many are still living in hotels, making an already bad situation for travellers even worse, and the extra mouths to feed are causing occasional serious disruptions in food supplies. In recent months, Damascus even has had bread shortages, something unknown in the past.

Another 40,000 to 60,000 are in Jordan, and like numbers fled to Egypt, Paris, and London. But perhaps nowhere has the impact been so great as here on Cyprus, where another 40,000 have been added to the Greek Cypriot population of 400,000 — an overnight 10 per cent population increase.

The influx of Lebanese money brought inflation with it — to an island economy with a relatively high standard of living, but still the cheapest place to live in the Mediterranean. Now Cyprus is rapidly approaching the European-Mideastern norm. Rents are soaring and other prices are responding to the increased demand from consumption-oriented Lebanese.

Understandably, this doesn't go down well with Cypriots struggling with fixed incomes. Resentment has increased because of the inevitable few who cashed bad checks or simply walked out without paying hotel bills, sometimes after running up astronomical international telephone bills.

For most of the Lebanese here, Cyprus is simply a place in midstream, a stopping off point in lives disrupted by the chaos at home. Some businessmen, both Lebanese and foreign, have found that they can operate in their traditional Middle East markets from here, a factor gradually being improved by better air services. But few believe it will ever become a regional centre such as Beirut was.

Some of the bigger Lebanese firms have made a relatively easy transition to other places, particularly those in the shipping and transit business which had offices already established in places like Athens. Trans-Mediterranean Airways, a Lebanese-based round-the-world cargo airline, was able to shift its headquarters to London since it was not bound by the usual covenants which apply to passenger airlines.

But for most businessmen working the rich Middle East market, there is no substitute for Beirut. Working from the Gulf and Saudi Arabia is not reasonable, not only because of the torrid weather but because the oil boom has priced the cities there out of any rational approach to trade.

The tragedy is that, among the hundreds of thousands of emgires, are the people who made the Lebanese economic miracle work. It was a miracle based on a most fragile foundation: A country with virutally no resources other than its location and its people, who refined the tradition of the Levantine trader to the ultimate.

It was based on their talent as fixers and go-betweeners, coupled with the free-wheeling economic system that made the Lebanon a meeting place for East and West — and providing, of course, a percentage for themselves.

Many still hope to go back some day, but the longer their country remains bitterly divided, the more they look for new places to settle and start life anew.

There's still time for largish coho

The final weekend of King Fisherman Contest competition showed some good-sized coho are still passing through Juan de Fuca Strait's Becher Bay to Oak Bay waters, probably on their way to Cowichan Bay.

Veteran Cowichan Bay anglers have reported coho this year are behaving as they used to 10 years ago and they are predicting November may be a hot bucktailing month in the bay. It all depends on the weather. Heavy rains would muddy the Bay waters and that would spell the end of bucktailing. But as it stands now the waters are clear and the coho are taking the flies trolled near the surface.

Identification of that 19-pound fish from Becher Bay is still under investigation to determine whether it was a coho or a chum salmon and an announcement will be made later.

All King Fisherman Contest entries should now be in the mail. The contest is over except for prize draws and awards.

Nothing moving yet on reorganizing property assessments

This year, next year, sometime, never is turning into more than a children's chant.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe said Tuesday the long-awaited provincial report on property assessment and taxation is now under study by a special cabinet committee.

Last week the Colonist published the three main recommendations of the still-secret report. They are that assessments be equalized at 100 per cent of market value immediately, that land and improvements be taxed at the 100% level and that the provincial government pick up 75 per cent of all schools costs.

Wolfe made no comment on the details of the report. He said property assessments for municipal and school tax purposes would remain the same in 1977.

Last week, the Colonist stated the same, but also pointed out that assessments have been frozen since 1974 and remain at that level for at least another year.

Wolfe said release of the report "should not be anticipated until after the special cabinet committee" has studied it.

The cabinet has had the report since August and it had been hoped that its findings could be implemented before the year end. But that required a decision by early October. With that deadline past, ideas of getting out more than one million new assessment notices had to be abandoned for a full year.

Wolfe said Tuesday that "inflation has had a major impact on property valuations and the process of refining and updating our assessment roll requires this additional time in order to provide assessments of a good quality and valuations which will be fair and equitable to all taxpayers."

The Colonist understands that the new assessments set at the 100 per cent market value level were ready to be distributed in early October.

Logging firms 'ignoring' poison chemical hazard

Logging companies are continuing to spray forests with poisonous chemicals to control insects and weeds without knowing their long-range effects on nature, says John Brooks, a retired fisheries officer.

Brooks was addressing the first in a series of public meetings to gather information for a provincial-federal salmon enhancement program.

Brooks said Monday that only last month forest lands between Jordan River and Sooke were sprayed with 2,4-D.

"I understand a stronger chemical would have been used but for the objections of the B.C. Fish and Wildlife branch," he said, adding the greatest threat to salmon streams was from chemical pollution.

Brooks, also a director of the Sooke Conservation Society, said the fisheries department should do more to back up its officers attempting to preserve Canada's fisheries resource.

Glenn Sinclair, a consultant for the federal fisheries department, said the salmon enhancement program was an attempt, through both natural and artificial enhancement techniques, to bring stock of both salmon and sea-run trout back to their levels at the beginning of the century.

More than 15 individuals and representatives of commercial fisheries organizations and conservation groups, said they preferred the rehabilitation of streams to the construction of hatcheries.

Although the biggest interest Tuesday was in the American president election, there were elections throughout the country for vacant Congress seats.

Vance Hartke (Dem.), defeated as senator in Indiana; trying for unprecedented — for Indiana — fourth term, beaten by Republican Richard Lugar, Rhodes scholar and former Indianapolis mayor.

Edward Ted Kennedy (Dem.), re-elected Massachusetts senator; last surviving brother of assassinated president John Kennedy and slain Senator Robert Kennedy, turned down presidential bids in 1972 and 1976 to remain in the Senate.

Thomas (Tip) O'Neill (Dem.), re-elected in Massachusetts; majority leader in House of Representatives and likely next speaker, his 13th straight term.

Lowell Weicker (Rep.) re-elected senator for Connecticut; gained national fame and some conservative Republican enemies as member of Senate Watergate committee; defeated Gloria Schaffer (Dem.)

John Rockefeller (Dem), elected governor of West Virginia over former Republican governor Cecil Underwood; nephew of vice-president Nelson Rockefeller, he lost a run at the governorship four years ago.

Peter Rodino (Dem), re-elected to House of Representatives for New Jersey; at 67, served in House since 1948 and was chairman of judiciary committee at time a bill of impeachment was voted against former president Richard Nixon.

Pierre du Pont (Rep.), elected Delaware governor; scion of fabulously wealthy chemical company family, gave up his seat in House of Representatives to run for four-year term.

Hubert Humphrey (Dem.), re-elected Minnesota senator; recovering from cancerous bladder operation. He polled about three-quarters of the popular vote as against about one-quarter for his nearest opponent. One of the most respected Democrats, he was vice-president under Lyndon Johnson and lost to Richard Nixon in 1968 presidential election.

Shirley Chisholm (Dem.), re-elected to House of Representatives for New York; served since 1968 when she was first black woman elected to Congress. She was a presidential candidate in 1972 and ran in all primaries against George McGovern.

Donald Riegle (Dem.), elected Michigan senator in seat vacated by Democrat Philip Hart, seriously ill with cancer; Riegle's reputation marred in campaign by disclosure of extra-marital affair with former staff member.

Daniel Moynihan (Dem.), elected New York senator in stiff fight with incumbent James Buckley, a conservative Republican; quit as U.S. ambassador to the UN to run for the Senate.

Charles Vanik (Dem.) re-elected to House of Representatives for Ohio; his wealthy Cleveland suburban district borders Lake Erie and Vanik has strongly supported appropriations for anti-pollution programs in the Great Lakes.

Joseph Montoya (Dem.), defeated for re-election as New Mexico senator; first senator of Hispanic origin to be elected in his state, he was defeated by Harrison Jack Schmitt, 41, Republican, co-pilot of last Apollo module to land on the moon four years ago. Montoya was a member of the Senate Watergate committee.

James (Big Jim) Thompson (Rep.) elected Illinois governor over Michael Howlett, made headlines prosecuting corruption in official high places.

William Proxmire (Dem.) re-elected senator from Wisconsin; physical fitness fanatic at 60 and first senator to have a hair transplant; helped kill off the supersonic transport plane and active in investigating defence costs and wasteful spending.

Kenneth Holland (Dem.), re-elected to House of Representatives for South Carolina; defeated Bobby Richardson, star second baseman for New York Yankees 1955-56, making first try for public office.

Meldrim Thomson (Rep.), re-elected to third term as New Hampshire governor.

Henry (Scoop) Jackson (Dem.), re-elected to fifth six-year term as Washington senator; was a candidate for Democratic presidential election this year and won two primaries, but quit when Jimmy Carter began to come on. As chairman of Senate interior committee, he called Canada "fantasyland" during Alaska oil pipeline debate.

Morris Udall (Dem.), re-elected to House of Representatives for Arizona; member of House since 1961 and leader of Liberal Democratic bloc; a Mormon, lost sight of an eye as youth but still played college basketball. Unsuccessful candidate for Democratic presidential nomination when his campaign ran out of money. He threw support behind Jimmy Carter.

Edmund Muskie (Dem.), re-elected Maine senator; former governor and vice-presidential running mate to Hubert Humprey in the 1968 presidential election, he was unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1972.

Rev. Robert Drinan (Dem.), re-elected to House of Representatives for Massachusetts; Jesuit priest who won third term, he was first Roman Catholic priest elected to the House; he was among the first to call for former president Richard Nixon's impeachment.

Dan Marriott (Rep.) defeated Allan Howe, freshman congressman in Utah, where the Democrat was twice convicted of soliciting from two policewomen posing as prostitutes; Howe refused to withdraw from the race and Democrats endorsed write-in candidate Daryl McCarty.

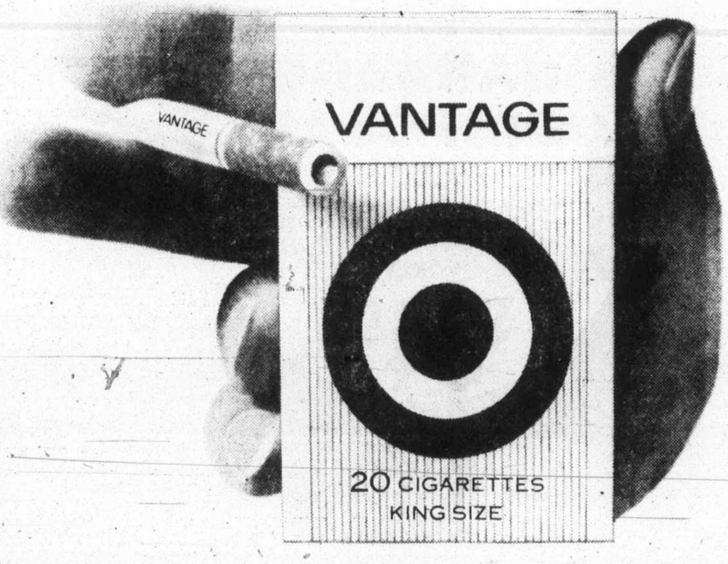
Why do you smoke?



If you're a smoker, you know that smoking a cigarette can be one of those rare and pleasurable private moments.

And the chances are you don't want to give up any of that.

Which brings us to Vantage.

Vantage is the cigarette for people who don't entertain the idea of giving up cigarettes because they find cigarettes too entertaining.

Vantage gives you the taste you want. The full, rich flavour of Virginia tobaccos. But the big difference is the Vantage filter. It's based on a unique new design concept that gives you so much of what you want in a cigarette, with a lot less of what you don't want.

Vantage is not a heavy drag cigarette. The smoke comes through easily, without a lot of hard work on your part.

All in all, Vantage is a unique cigarette that has real meaning for any thoughtful smoker.

Why not try a pack today.

Warning: Health and Welfare Canada advises that danger to health increases with amount smoked—avoid inhaling. 11 mg. "tar" 0.8 mg. nicotine.

20 voters at public meeting

Candidates criticize city council record

About 20 people showed up for Greater Victoria's first all-candidates meeting at the James Bay Community School Monday night, to meet the candidates for Victoria city council.

The nine candidates, four of whom will be elected as aldermen on Nov. 20, were each given five minutes to present their views. Council itself seemed to be on trial as speaker after speaker attacked its record on land-use and alleged favoritism toward developers.

The three incumbents, Murray Glazier, John Hayes and Robert Ellis, made a point of defending council's record.

Charles Ball, a community worker, James Bay resident, and 28-year-old University of Victoria student, said the main theme of this year's election was the competence of the present council. He said council displayed a lack of responsibility in dealing with community groups, and should be given a vote of no-confidence.

Car dealer Frank Carson, an Oak Bay resident, said he would help to control high-rise development if he were elected. He said Victoria residents should be protected from rising crime and vandalism.

Incumbent Ellis said Victoria was "the envy of planning departments in other Canadian cities, like Calgary and Edmonton." He said a "shopping list" for the future should include an auditorium, an art centre, a convention centre, and an Inner Harbor marina.

Glazier cited his professional qualifications as an engineer and a former representative for the three prairie provinces with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. "I have run afoul of developers in my stand on heritage demolition," he said.

The third incumbent, Hayes, said, "I don't want to see the neighborhoods destroyed, but we have to put the housing somewhere." He said special transit lanes should be established to serve the downtown area from the western communities.

William McElroy, a research officer with the provincial housing department, reissued his challenge to aldermanic candidates to make public their debts and financial holdings before the election. He said council meetings should be held at night, so working people could attend. He also said he was "sick and tired" of Saanich and Oak Bay residents telling Victoria how to run its parks.

Joe Richards, a B.C. Forest Service stockman, said he stood for a ward system in Victoria, and that he was opposed to Oak Bay residents holding seats on Victoria city council. He was in favor of evening council meetings, police protection with policemen walking a beat, and more fire protection.

Victoria Labor Council secretary Larry Ryan, a Victoria resident and Fairfield homeowner, told the audience he was experienced in community project work. Ryan is on the B.C. Human Rights Commission. He said Victoria needed "harmony between the constituencies that make a city government functional."

Ann Tarasoff, president of the Capital Region Tenants' Association, said the present council "still serves business and developer interests."

"She complained that non-affordable rental units were continually being built, like condominiums and townhouses which "working people can't afford." She said a law should be passed to prevent landlords from discriminating against children. "Unbiased persons should serve the people," she said.

CUPE favors school strike

PRINCETON (CP) — Local 900 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees has voted 93 per cent in favor of taking strike action if necessary to settle a labor dispute with School District 17.

CUPE is asking for an increase in wages of 15 per cent and the district has offered a three-per-cent wage increase.

Port Alice racing to beat slide threat

Twice partly inundated by mudslides in the past, the community of Port Alice is in a new race against time as heavy fall rains begin their annual onset.

After hundreds of thousands of dollars damage to homes in 1973 and again last year from mud and debris being carried down two creeks that drain the heavily-logged mountain behind the village at Rumble Beach, efforts began to either move the community and its 1,200 people or take preventive measures.

After a $10,000 study by Northwest Hydraulic Consultants of Vancouver, the provincial government announced in September it would pay up to $250,000 for a system of dikes to protect the village from future slides.

Alderman Art Czech, in a telephone interview from Port Alice, told the Colonist Tuesday that if all goes well the job should be finished within three weeks.

"It's already raining heavily — we've had up to half an inch an hour in several intermittent disturbances that passed through in the last three or four days.

"But the village work crews and local contractors hired to do the job are able to divert the creeks and continue working," he said.

The consultants who devised the double dike system did so after several months' research that included building a mockup of the village and the terrain behind, triggering miniature mudslides, then erecting small dikes to see which would work best.

Czech said the closest dike to the village is about 500 feet from the nearest row of houses, with another about 200 feet further up the mountainside. Both are raised about 15 feet above ground level, with a hollow about 15 feet deep and 40 to 60 feet wide in front, and they taper off each side of the village towards the sea.

"The idea is that if the first one overflows, the second one will hold," Czech said.

He said the village held a public emergency seminar to discuss action in the event of a major mudslide and the consensus of villagers was that they should be safe when the dikes are in place.

"We have a lot of confidence in the engineers," he said.

HOW TO MIX A HORSESHOT

Its name not withstanding, the Horseshot is not a case for the veterinarian, but rather a mixed drink of the Smirnoff school, a sort of Bloody Mary with the extra flavour kick of horse radish.

But the Horseshot is no second runner. With a charm and nip all its own, this great red beauty can keep up with the best of them.

To make a Horseshot, pour 1½ oz. Smirnoff into a tall glass with ice, fill with tomato juice, add horse radish to taste and stir. Sip slowly.

CBC gets nod; Victoria TV station going ahead

The CBC has been given clearance to establish its long-awaited television station in Victoria and to set up 12 TV rebroadcasting stations in northern Vancouver Island communities.

A CBC spokesman in Vancouver said the station, utilizing Channel 10, was expected to be in operation in less than two years — possibly by September, 1978.

His comment followed the announcement in Ottawa that the Canadian Radio-Television Commission (CRTC) had approved the corporation's applications for the Vancouver Island service.

He said there would be a working agreement with BCTV under which both networks would provide service to 98 per cent of the Island's population.

The arrangement means that Victoria's existing station, CHEK-TV, will be in a position to end its flirtation with both networks and enter a full-time marriage with BCTV. This would allow it to feed complete CTV national service to the Island.

"This is great news," said the CBC spokesman. "They have just brought all of Vancouver Island into the TV community."

The rebroadcasting stations are to be located at Port McNeill, Nimpkish, Holberg, Port Alice, Coal Harbor, Port Hardy, Alert Bay, Tofino, Wokas Lake, Gold River, Woss and Tahsis.

The corporation's Victoria station is to be built on a parcel of land on Blanshard Street east of the Victoria Press building. Sale of the land to the CBC for $500,000 was approved by city council in February, 1975.

The CBC said earlier that costs of starting the station would be $7 million. More spending had been planned, but this was curtailed by budget restraints.

In its beginning stages, the Victoria station is to have little in the way of local content. During the application hearing last March, the CBC said there would be 7½ hours a week of local programming during the station's early life.

The situation would be improved in time, the spokesman said Tuesday.

Licence under attack

Council talks tough on cabaret problem

Victoria city council is talking tough about the James Bay Inn.

At its weekly informal policy session Tuesday, council agreed that a resolution be prepared asking the Liquor Administration Branch to revoke the Inn's cabaret licence. Council invited the hotel management to respond before Nov. 25, when the resolution is scheduled for debate and a vote by council.

Council agreed to ask police to continue surveillance of the Government Street hotel in the meantime.

A number of James Bay residents complained to council last month about what they described as foul language, rowdyism, drunkenness and damage to their property by inebriated hotel customers.

Deputy Police Chief L. J. Mottershead told council that for permanent relief to residents, the cabaret licence had to be revoked.

This would not necessitate cancellation of the dining lounge licence but would eliminate the live music and dancing, he said, "thus restoring an atmosphere befitting the residential area."

Mayor Michael Young recalled that when the hotel operated under a cocktail licence no problems were encountered by residents, "but since the cabaret—The Foghorn—opened, it has been a different story."

Young added: "My own personal contact with residents living near the hotel revealed a very painful situation exists, especially at weekends."

Ald. John Hayes said the inn was ideally situated for a neighborhood pub, "but not for a noisy cabaret."

The deputy chief stressed that policing and controlling customers to the satisfaction of area residents was a physical impossibility.

He noted that virtually every liquor outlet in the city closed at the same time, and problems at many of the hotels were far more numerous than those at the James Bay Inn.

These hotels did not attract the same adverse publicity because they were situated primarily in business districts, he pointed out.

The report indicated that last year only six complaints were recorded from the James Bay Inn, including vandalism, wilful damage, false pretences and one complaint of noise. So far this year, five complaints of similar nature and one sexual assault on a cocktail waitress had been reported.

Alderman assails chamber chiefs for 'socialist' talk

By BILL SMITH
Colonist Reporter

His comments came Tuesday during a Central Business District Advisory Committee discussion of B.C. Hydro's recent announcement of a 40 per cent increase in bus fares.

After being told by chamber spokesman Alan Emery that the chamber executive had endorsed a motion Tuesday morning protesting the hike because it was four times the increase permitted under federal anti-inflation guidelines, McKenzie retorted: "I think it's a sad state of affairs for the chamber to consider such action."

The increase, McKenzie argued, was justified. "You only have to read Hydro's financial statements to appreciate that fact."

Emery, however, was adamant. "Our whole society has come under the AIB regulations, yet crown corporations are permitted to come up with a 40-per-cent increase," he said.

The provincial government, Emery added, entered into an agreement with the federal government to respect the AIB guidelines, a line followed to some extent by labor and business. "Yet, the government goes on its merry way disregarding those guidelines."

Civic leaders and chambers of commerce, he said, had a responsibility to say to government that it should cut its spending because by its actions it was losing its credibility.

"The chamber cannot stand by and allow this carte blanche credit card approach by government," Emery said.

He said the chamber executive had endorsed a motion protesting the increase on the grounds that it was not justified and exceeded the eight to 10 per cent guideline imposed by the AIB.

The committee also adopted a resolution stating it opposed the hike as unjustified.

Pulp mill layoff not total

NANAIMO — About 30 men a day will be kept busy at the Harmac pulp mill for about two weeks at the end of the year when the mill shuts down in late December.

MacMillan Bloedel officials announced Monday that the Nanaimo, Port Alberni and Powell River Mills, along with two in Eastern Canada, would be closing for two weeks. The reasons given included an excess in inventories of newsprint and continuing softness of world markets for pulp and paper.

The Nanaimo mill will employ about 30 men a day on tasks such as maintenance, security and keeping the steam plant in operation.

However, the balance of the staff, numbering close to 1,200 men, will have an extended vacation without pay.

The mill is scheduled to close Dec. 22 and reopen on Jan. 3.

Union officer isn't quitting

Support from inside workers at Victoria City Hall has caused an official of their union local to withdraw his resignation.

Canadian Union of Public Employees' local vice-president Rick Doyle quit his union post last Friday, protesting the attitude of personnel director Terry Fitzpatrick in dealing with contract grievances.

Doyle cited "utter frustration" with Fitzpatrick, saying it was "too damn frustrating trying to obtain answers to simple questions from the director."

Doyle has since been threatened with legal action by Fitzpatrick. A petition circulated among city hall staff Monday and Tuesday urged Doyle to change his mind.

The union local, representing 200 workers, supports Doyle's complaints against the personnel director, and it agreed at a noon meeting Tuesday to bypass Fitzpatrick and take all future problems directly to city manager James Bramley.

Doyle told the Colonist he had enjoyed excellent dealings with Bramley in the past, and did not expect any problems in the future.

Under the terms of the union contract, Doyle noted, all correspondence between the union and the city could pass through the union secretary, the personnel director and-or the municipal manager.

Service record softens penalty

An exemplary, 19-year military record has probably saved a Canadian Forces serviceman from a jail sentence and dismissal from the service.

A three-man disciplinary court martial demoted Master Corporal Adolph Gustav Plewa, 46, to private Tuesday after finding him guilty Monday of conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline.

The charge was in connection with Plewa's duties as a mess manager at the junior ranks mess at CFB Esquimalt between Oct. 20, 1973, and Dec. 31, 1974, and involved the theft of $1,400 from coin-operated machines at Club 44.

Two others charged after investigation of the club's affairs received prison terms and were dismissed from the forces.

Robert Allan Ganner, a former president of the mess, was sentenced to four years in prison and Michael Joseph Sylvio Dalrymple, a former vice-president, received a one-year sentence.

The court, consisting of president Cmdr. F. H. Hope of HMCS Saskatchewan, Lt.-Cmdr. J. Y. Macpherson of Maritime Staff Pacific and Lieut. L. B. Spears of Naval engineering unit Pacific, stayed an alternative charge of theft of the same $1,400 and found Plewa innocent of conspiracy with a former bar manager to steal money from the coin-operated machines.

Plewa's civilian lawyer, Robert Johnston of Victoria, introduced a number of written commendations from Plewa's superiors Monday and introduced five character witnesses in Tuesday's mitigation process.

One of the witnesses described Plewa as the best steward in the Pacific region of the Canadian Forces.

Johnston told the court Monday that his client could take any form of punishment except dismissal from the service. He said Plewa had already signed over his pay allotment to begin repayment of the $1,400.

Mayor's view of housing

Province trying to shift blame

By STEPHEN HUME
Colonist Reporter

Sidney Mayor Peter Malcolm said Tuesday the province appeared to be using "heavy-handed methods" to place blame for housing costs on municipalities.

And he accused two cabinet ministers of "chicken politics" in refusing to identify municipalities accused in a special housing report of indulging in land speculation.

He was one of several Vancouver Island mayors commenting on the report of a joint committee on housing headed by Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawfl.

One of the report's recommendations was that the Municipal Act be amended to give the housing minister power to tell a regional district how many housing units were required in the region.

At a press conference called to make the report public, Housing Minister Hugh Curtis said municipalities failing to meet housing requirements in the future would face loss of provincial government grants.

Both Curtis and Bawlf declined to identify B.C. municipalities accused in the report of withholding land for housing development.

"This sort of threat (the loss of grants) is an insult to the regional districts. Their not naming the municipalities is chicken politics," Malcolm said.

"B.C. has the highest housing costs in Canada," he continued. "What the province appears to be doing is using heavy-handed methods to lay the blame for housing costs on the doorstep of the municipalities."

Malcolm said municipalities were more aware of housing needs than the province.

Capital Region Board chairman James Campbell said the report's recommendations could mean that the housing minister was "simply going to give the unpleasant task of allocating housing requirements to the regional districts," so the province wouldn't have to do it.

"They've handed the districts a hot potato," he said.

"If the province is making a genuine effort to co-operate with the regional districts, that's one thing. But if the minister wants the regions to carry out provincial housing policy, then the recommendations won't be welcomed by the regional districts.

"It isn't enough to hand one form of control to regional government. There's more to regional planning than just housing," Campbell said.

Victoria Mayor Michael Young said: "I think Hugh Curtis is too sensitive to municipal affairs to try to wrest control from the municipalities. Yet his statements sound like a threat. The province wants to issue demerit points. It's a little incredible."

He added: "To weigh the performance of municipalities on the basis of whether they can deliver housing is foolish and stupid. Curtis (had) better list off his areas of concern before he starts threatening the municipalities of this province."

Saanich acting mayor Joe Bourque said it was unfortunate that provincial policy recommendations were in the form of a "veiled threat."

"I recognize their desire to meet housing needs," he said, "but it doesn't seem a particularly fair way of approaching municipal growth."

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith said the recommendations would reduce municipalities to the role of "provincial messengerboy."

"If a municipality can't make a bona-fide decision on landuse after taking into account the wishes and needs of its own citizens, it may as well fold up its door and let Big Brother take over municipal affairs," he said.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young thought some of the recommendations were a bit strong.

"Why bother having municipalities at all if we can't have control over our own destinies?" he wondered.

Duncan Mayor Ken Paskin said he disagreed if the committee implied that municipalities were villains in the problem of housing costs.

"Developers, real estate people, lawyers and mortgage companies are the ones that want a bigger and bigger slice of the pie, not the municipalities," he said.

Vaccine here Monday

First flu shots Nov. 19 and 20

Barring any last-minute hitch, the first clinics to administer flu vaccine will be held Nov. 19 and 20 in the Capital Region District.

Registration starts today at most health service offices in the district and at the Esquimalt recreation centre.

The flu vaccine is a combination intended to protect against both swine flu and the Victoria A strain prevalent locally last winter. The first 12,000 batches of the 30,000 batches coming to the city are scheduled to arrive next Monday.

Regional health officer Dr. Allan Arneil said Tuesday that dates for clinics at Port Renfrew and the outer Gulf Islands would be announced later.

Clinic locations, dates and hours:

In Victoria at 1947 Cook from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

The Esquimalt Recreation Centre from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19.

In Oak Bay at the municipal hall, 2167 Oak Bay Avenue, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

In Saanich beside the municipal hall, 780 Vernon, from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

At the James Bay Community Centre, 435 Simcoe, from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19.

In Langford, at 2782 Millstream, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

In Sooke, at 6693 Sooke Road, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

The Sidney clinic will be held at 2440 Sidney Avenue, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

At Ganges, on Salt Spring Island, the health office on Rainbow Road, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

City makes move

Crystal Garden given boost

A proposal to transform the abandoned Victoria Crystal Garden into a botanical garden took a step forward Tuesday when city council approved preservation of the former saltwater pool.

Council, at its weekly informal policy session, also:

- ● Agreed to commit the city to financing not to exceed $500,000.
- ● Decided to refer the proposal to the provincial government's Capital Improvement District Commission.

Former city alderman Sam Bawlf, who two years ago advocated a similar concept for the Crystal, is now the cabinet minister responsible for disbursing of the CIDC funds.

Ald. Robert Wright said the fact that Bawlf had pushed the proposal in the past "encourages me. I can see obvious assistance from that area."

Mayor Michael Young said the development proposal would be ready soon for presentation to the CIDC.

The proposal, outlined last week by Ald. John Hayes, envisages a tea garden and 200-seat theatre in the 52-year-old building, as well as the botanical garden.

Hayes said council had three options: demolish the Crystal Garden at a cost which could run as high as $250,000; leave the derelict building the way it is, which amounted to eventual demolition; or preserve it.

He suggested the third because "the building is basically a huge greenhouse."

ICBC leading school costs

Keeping up with ICBC is not only difficult for motorists, but school districts as well, it appears.

District 69 school trustees learned last week that the school board will have to borrow an extra $25,617 to complete renovations at Parksville Middle School because of ICBC demands for changes and additions to the building.

"The architect must submit plans to ICBC at several stages in the planning process, and each time he has had additional requirements imposed on him, which he has satisfied repeatedly.

"It has gotten to the point where the exact cost of the ICBC requirements cannot be separately identified, but it is clear that they are the reason we will need an addition on the school," trustee Mac Stone told the board.

In other school building news, a local contractor came in with the low bid for additions and renovations to Parksville Middle School. McCurrie Constructions bid of $294,117 is for new construction at the school, and renovations to the science area.

Toronto trading

The market, which traditionally follows the New York trend, was on its own Tuesday as Wall Street was closed for election day in the United States.

United Corporations Class B was the largest of the 26 block trades with 153,000 shares at $13 a share. Union Gas Ltd. Class A followed with 24,000 shares at $8¾ ashare and the C and C Yachts Ltd. record 19,100 shares at $3.45 a share.

Among other industrials, Northern Telecom was up 1⅜ to $34¾, Home Oil A 1¼ to $24¾, Bank of Nova Scotia 1⅛ to $44, Asbestos one to $29 and Hudson's Bay Oil one to $33¼.

Trading in shares of Fields Stores Ltd. and Zeller's Ltd., halted Monday at request of the companies, resumed Tuesday. Fields rose ⅜ to $9 and Zeller's was unchanged at $3.40.

Zeller's board of directors has approved in principle a share-exchange takeover bid for all Fields shares held by Canadian residents.

Big year at Boeing

SEATTLE (AP)—The Boeing Co. Monday reported nine-month sales of $2.7 billion and predicts that its fourth quarter will be an excellent one.

The aerospace firm, the world's largest builders of commercial jet aircraft, said "continued favorable performance on major programs," sales greater than what had been anticipated and lower interest rates contributed to the good performance.

Chairman T. A. Wilson said earnings for the first three quarters were $65.3 million, or $3.08 a share, compared with earnings of $55.7 million, or $2.63 a share, during the same period in 1975.

Wilson said the firm sold 92 commercial jets during the first nine months of the year. Boeing will deliver another 47 jets before the year ends, he said.

Hometown success story

Ten years of pizza pies

By GEORGE GIBSON
Colonist Business Editor

What would you do to dispose of seven tons of mozzarella cheese every month?

For one thing, you could make and sell a lot of pizza pies and that's the lucrative solution that the Pizza Pieman arrived at for his monthly cheese order.

The Pieman is Bob Darnell who this week is sitting back and looking at 10 years of pizza hustling in this area and other parts of B.C. He's a hometown boy who has made good but admits that he was working as a paint salesman in Winnipeg before he saw the possibility of Victoria being a city of pizza eaters.

Darnell, with partner Doug Mills, own and operate nine Pizza Pieman outlets on Vancouver Island and in Vancouver, and just last September opened their first franchised restaurant and takeout in Kelowna.

Darnell admits to sales approaching $2 million this year. No wonder he can use up all that cheese.

But why start in Victoria? And why pizzas, in this the land of the fish and chip shop?

Darnell said that he tried pizzas and liked them back in Winnipeg. He saw them selling well in Toronto, too and frequent holiday return trips to Victoria made him appreciate the fact that this was a strong growth area — one of apartments and people with the disposable income that would allow them to send out for a pizza in the middle of a late movie on the TV.

But what about all those fish and chip rivals?

"No. We're two different things. Fish and chip shops do the bulk of their business around the dinner hour. Ours spreads out from lunchtime away past midnight," he replied in an interview this week.

The Pieman theorizes that he started with a strong, effective marketing image and this helped to get him established. He and partners Nick North and Fred Manning put up $27,000 in establishing a very small shop in the Town and Country Shopping Centre in Saanich to get things going in 1966.

The doughty-looking little chef and the bright red, white and green Italian colors were adopted as the logo and this has stood up well over the 10 years.

"But he's got a subtle change in his appearance now," Darnell says.

"We tried to do it right. Ted Bethune, a very creative man at Cockfield Brown (a national advertising agency) did the design," Darnell related.

"But you know, it's had a kind of funny effect. The logo was so good people around here are under the impression that we can't be a local outfit, we must be owned by McDonalds or somebody," he added. Darnell said that his current advertising campaign is trying to make that local-ownership angle apparent.

The president went on to say that Peter Gazeley, an interior decorator at Standard Furniture, designed the decor and elements of his style are still carried on in Pizza Pieman's ventures into full-service restaurants.

Darnell . . . dough and sauce

But despite the image, the pies themselves had to sell. Darnell said that he had a big assist there with his own recipe for dough, one for sauce from Ermano Della Costa's mother and help from his brother Rick and their respective spouses.

"There were five of us then. Now the staff is about 140 in our own nine locations and we have 20 vehicles. About half of the staff are part-timers whom we rely on heavily on the big-buildup weekends," Darnell said.

Della Costa and Bob's brother were unemployed chefs at the time of the startup and they volunteered their services in the establishing of the business. Della Costa became a partner and operated the Nanaimo outlet before moving on to Vancouver. Mills bought that section of the partnership two years ago after working in insurance.

"It happened with the change of government," Mills said, with a laugh.

Darnell is not looking to be taken over by some fast-food conglomerate. He admits that he really doesn't know how he'd respond if he ever had an offer.

Right now he's studying what appears to be a successful first-launching of a franchise in the Okanagan before he expands further in that field.

"There are lots of possibilities, through the Okanagan, Kamloops, Prince George, and other Island locations," he said.

His first franchisee, in Kelowna, is Dennis Cullimore. He's the same man who used to run Shelbourne Fish and Chips in Saanich.

Been to the bank lately? If so, you'll no doubt have noticed the flurry of unsmiling folks standing in long lineups and clipping Canada Savings Bonds coupons, trying to get them deposited in time to get a full month's interest — on the unchallenged theory that every little bit helps.

They're not smiling much behind the counters under this pressure. Besides the hectic activity that comes at coupon-clipping time, there's an added element that is fraying nerves at banks, trust companies and credit unions.

The financial institutions, the post office, the Bank of Canada and maybe even the mailman's dog may get kicked around on this one before it's over.

The sad tale is centred around those CSBs, especially the ones that are fully registered. They differ from coupon bonds in that the Bank of Canada mails the owner a cheque for the amount of interest due, payable Nov. 1.

The trouble is that the cheques weren't in the householders' mail until Tuesday, Nov. 2. When they rushed them down to the banks and other financial houses they may or may not have learned that they were one day too late if they hoped to get interest for November on the deposit.

To some this may seem like rather small beer. But to those in the money business here it's a big item as they're fully aware that some of their depositors get rather handsome cheques indeed each year from the CSB yields.

The information officer at the post office, Buzz Sawyer, said Tuesday that the cheques weren't released by the Bank of Canada until Monday, Nov. 1 and weren't even on the premises Monday, although they got here in time for Tuesday's delivery.

"Don't blame us," Sawyer appealed. "We got them out as fast as we could. I've had quite a few calls on this already and some are asking their MP for an explanation."

One area MP, Allan McKinnon, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that he was already aware of the problem and intended to approach the Finance Minister on the question. He also said that he intended to bring it up in the Conservative caucus today.

Jack Baines, the manager of the Bank of Montreal's main branch here, said that he certainly regretted what has happened but his bank wouldn't be making allowance for the delay.

"It's part of a bigger problem. A lot of people now are getting interest and dividend payments sent directly into their banks instead of their home delivery, for safety's sake.

"At the end of every month we can have anywhere from 3,000 to 5,000 such deposits. We have to hire temporary help just to catch up.

"Now sometimes those deposits don't get made in time to get the full interest but people generally don't complain," he said.

"But, if your bank or whatever gives you the interest, just consider yourself lucky," he added.

Perhaps if the era of instant banking — with a central computer somewhere that could swiftly handle an operation such as this for the Bank of Canada — comes out of the current revision of the Bank Act, foulups such as this could be avoided.

Daily Colonist photographer Ian McKain offered one solution:

"Why not take the coupons, or cheques, and use them to help buy more bonds? That way you're assured of the November interest."

If that's your route, you might do well to act quickly. The Bank of Canada is entitled to end sales of CSBs on Friday although less than robust sales to date indicate that they may be obtained until Nov. 15. But after the current fiasco, why take a chance?

Ford sells warranty option

OAKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Motorists will be able to buy extra warranty coverages for their automobiles under a plan announced Tuesday by Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd.

The extra coverage will be available immediately to buyers of new cars, both 1976 and 1977 models, and of one to three-year-old cars with less than 60,000 miles.

William Hawkins, vice-president and general manager, said motorists who opt for the plan will increase coverage on certain systems of their car from the normal 12 months or 12,000 miles to 36 months or 36,000 miles.

The extra two years of coverage will cost buyers $90 for a sub-compact like the Pinto; $135 for a Granada, Cougar or Torino; $175 for the Ford, Mercury car lines and Meteor; and $195 for luxury cars like the Lincoln.

The offer, called the optional extended service plan, is for both new and used cars covering certain parts of the engine, transmission, drive shaft, rear axle, steering, brakes, air conditioning and electrical systems. There is a $25 deductible provision.

Only the original buyer of a new car is eligible for the plan, which also pays up to $10 a day for five days to cover the cost of a loan car when vehicles are kept overnight by a dealer for repairs.

Cost of the plan to buyers of used cars will depend on the model and age of the vehicle. A Ford spokesman estimated the cost could vary from $60 to $150. Only used cars purchased from dealers are eligible.

Ford is introducing the plan to Canada and the U.S. this year after a successful test of it in California.

Chamber clarifies stance for AIB

MONCTON (CP) — Bernard Panet-Raymond, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, said Tuesday there has been some public misunderstanding about the organization's position on the federal anti-inflation controls program.

He said the chamber, at its annual meeting last month in Montreal, did not suggest that the anti-inflation board was unsupportable "nor that we were withdrawing support from any type of controls."

He told the Greater Moncton Chamber of Commerce that convention delegates at Montreal voted to oppose the controls program "as currently structured."

Delegates also voted to support a temporary controls program that would conform to certain guidelines.

"Our delegates asked that the controls program be equitable in allocating the share of burden among business, investors, labor and government."

He said the delegates were saying, in effect, that there should be a program in which all sectors of the economy can participate on an equal basis.

Your Wife May Have Written It . . .

Dear Husband and Kids:

I can tell by your fretting and stewing that Christmas is coming up again. For years I've played dumb and ended up with prize packages . . . like in (1969), a portable oxygen inhaler; (1973), a leopard skin raincoat; in (1974), a complete home tool shop.

In each of those years I assured you, with happy tears, that the gift was exactly what I needed.

That's It! This year mother is going to tell you what she wants and even where to find the best values she's found.

This is what mother wants for Christmas . . .

(1) The family together; (2) a picture of everyone; (3) no arguments; (4) stay out of the kitchen.

But, if you feel that it wouldn't be Christmas unless you spent some money on me, I'll tell you I want furniture this year; I'd like a Microrange and I sure could use a dishwasher. I've been shopping for months and I've found that The Traders Furniture and Appliance Store on Finlayson Street right beside The Chinese Village has everything I want. They're open nightly 'til 9 p.m., Saturdays 'til 6. They're even open on Sundays Noon 'til 5.

Kids . . . Our floor lamp has never been right since you knocked it over. Surprise me with a new one from The Traders; or maybe you can get me one of those Rockwell Electronic Calculators that do just about everything; the one with the memory is the one I need to help me with grocery shopping . . . they've got it on sale at $13.88.

Honey . . . The Traders have a beautiful selection of chairs at all prices. You pick one out. Anything The Traders have will please me.

Also, our sofa is showing a little wear, and The Traders have some real beauties . . . loveseats and chairs to match . . . do you read me? We can put the old one downstairs; or, you can trade it in at The Traders.

And, one more thing . . for once in your life, listen to momma . . . don't go shopping around like puppies at a flower show. I've done all that and it is exhausting.

Oh yes, and make sure you put our name down for the 20" Admiral Color TV. They're going to draw for one on Christmas eve and I'm sure you'd like a new Color TV this Christmas. You get one chance to win for every $25 you spend. Just drive straight down to The Traders on Finlayson St. They're almost always open.

With all my love,
Your wife and mother.

P.S. Just tell them it's for me and they'll stand on their head to please you.

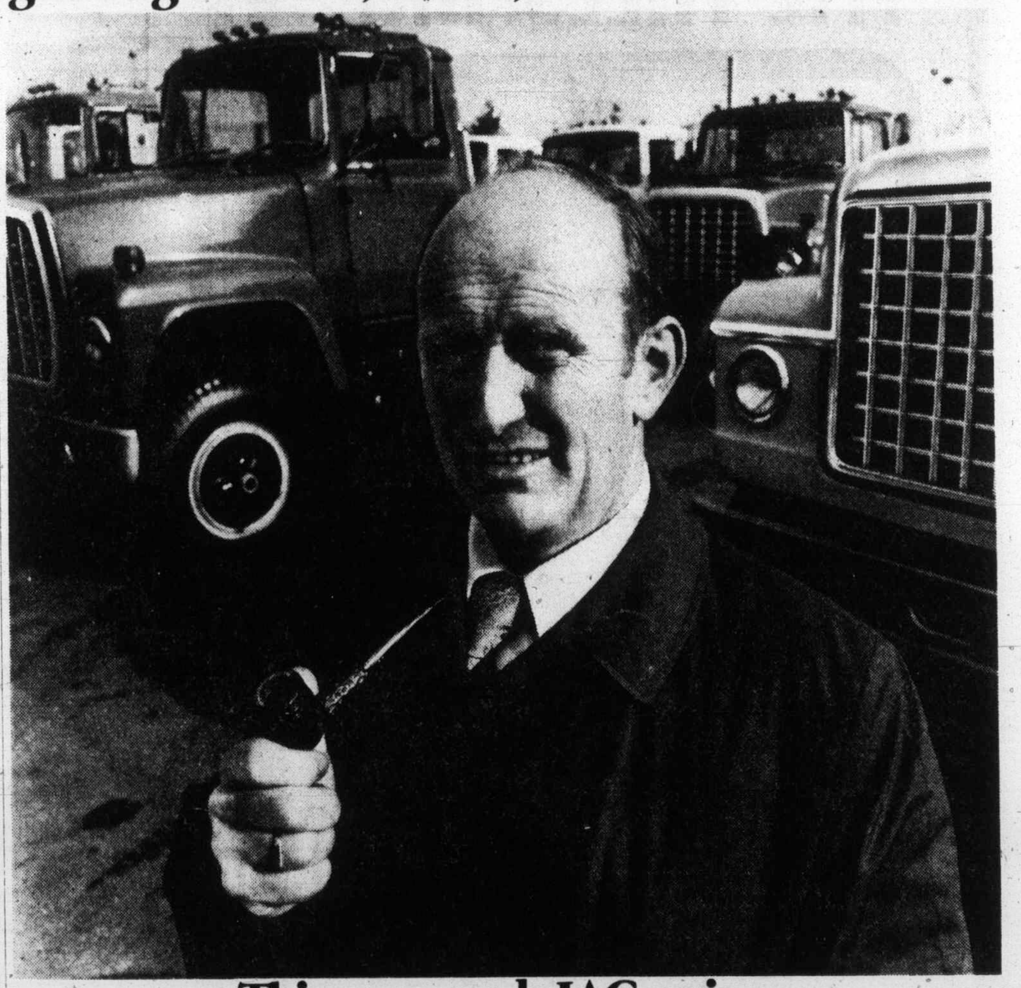
The only thing that stands between this man and a growing business, is $250,000.00 worth of trucks.



This man needs IAC action.

He'll get it the minute he talks to an IAC leasing and financing consultant. The man this contractor will talk to is backed by more than fifty years worth of experience and all the resources you'd expect to find with one of Canada's largest financial institutions. He'll show him how a custom tailored lease plan can help his company get the trucks it needs now. He'll show this man how payments can be arranged on a controlled budget designed to work hand in hand with peak cash flow periods. Step by step he'll explain the differences between leasing and financing and the advantages of each. He'll explain it straight and to the point. He'll do all this because that's his job. To put money into action for people like this contractor. What can he do for you?

Adams Lake project

Silver mine nearer

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Production is expected to start next spring at the multi-million-dollar underground silver mine site near Adams Lake, says Kamad Silver Co. Ltd.

The property is located about 2½ miles from Agate Bay, 17 miles off the Yellowhead Highway from this Southern Interior city.

Boultbee says about $2.5 million has been spent in testing and studies, with shafting and tunnelling completed. Cost of getting the mine into production is estimated at $4 million.

Quadra Resources of Calgary, which will operate the mine under royalty to Kamad Silver Co. Ltd., is expected to start winter construction using about 50 workers.

In production, the mine would employ about 50 people daily on a three-shift basis.

The mine is projected to produce about 225,000 ore tons annually, generating a revenue of $22.5 million, the Figure is based on an estimated 750 ore-ton capacity a day.

Ore concentrate would be shipped to the railhead at Louis Creek or Barriere for transportation to smelting facilities at an undetermined location. Trail and a site in Idaho are under construction.

The company says the long-term outlook of the mine is about 10 years based on production of silver, barite, lead, zinc and gold.

Canadian airlines returning to profit?

CALGARY (CP) — Canadian airlines may make a profit next year because of more rational air fares and higher load factors, Claude Taylor, chairman of the Air Transport Association of Canada, said Monday.

Taylor, who is also president of Air Canada, told the association's annual meeting that airlines are attempting to rationalize costs to generate much-needed profits after two deficit years.

In 1975, the industry recorded a net deficit of $6.8 million on its operations and because of the air traffic controllers strike last June it does not expect to improve upon that performance this year, Taylor said.

But he said two factors have made him hopeful the industry may move back into the profits column next year.

"Fares are more rational in relation to cost than they were a year ago," Taylor said.

"There will have to be a wider public recognition that air fares are a bargain and that they will have to rise as costs go up."

He said more people are flying and the industry now is more willing to accept schedules and frequency of service more in line with market requirements. In the past, both of these factors were influenced more by competitive pressure than by market demand, Taylor said.

AIB 'must halt program'

CLC stand reinforced

OTTAWA (CP) — The Anti-Inflation Board's first annual report reinforced the Canadian Labor Congress position that the federal controls program "is unfair and dangerous and must be withdrawn," congress president Joe Morris said Monday.

"A comparison between the $9 million in excess corporation profits found by the Anti-Inflation Board and the rollbacks in wages and salaries which run into the hundreds of millions of dollars for the first year of the government's anti-inflation program confirms what the CLC has said time and time again: The federal government's program is heavily biased against wage and salary earners, who bear the brunt of the program," Morris said in a statement issued by the CLC.

When the report was released Oct. 22, Jean-Luc Pepin, chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, said the government was "right on target" in its attempt to slow the rate of inflation.

Morris said Monday that the Anti-Inflation Board, "in boasting about its accomplishments, fails to note that inflationary pressures had begun to moderate even before the program was introduced and that very similar results would probably have occurred even without introduction of the program and all the social and economic hardships it has created."

The congress estimated that more than one million workers participated in the Oct. 14 day of protest against the federal controls program.

PENALTY SHOT by Victoria's Gary Lupul is picked off by Brandon's Glen Hanlon during second-period action Tuesday night at Memorial Arena. Referee Bob Hull, who awarded the shot when Lupul was pulled down when in the clear, takes a close look at the action.

Cougars, Wheaties tie as goalkeepers sparkle

By STAN COOPER

Glen Hanlon was at his sparkling best for Brandon Wheat Kings Tuesday at Memorial Arena, but Murray Bannerman of Victoria Cougars was also in top form.

The rival goalkeepers put on an excellent display for the 2128 fans as the teams battled to a 2-2 tie in a game between Western Canada Hockey League division leaders.

Hanlon, the all-star netminder in the league last season, had by far the tougher test, as Cougars dominated most of the action. But the lanky redhead was equal to the task, and even stopped a penalty shot after a controversial call in the second period.

Cougar-rookie Gary Lupul was hauled down by defenceman Brad McCrimmon on a breakaway, but referee Bob Hull was slow in signalling the penalty shot.

Lupul, highest-scoring newcomer in the 12-team league this season, carried the puck straight at Hanlon and shot high — but the agile netminder whipped his glove up and caught the puck cleanly.

"He's some goalkeeper," Lupul said in the dressing room following the game. "I thought I had it past him but he moved so quickly."

Hanlon attributed the save — his second on three penalty shots in the last two seasons — to a certain amount of luck.

"I guessed he would go high and it turned out I was right," the 19-year-old Brandon product said.

Although Bannerman didn't have a penalty shot to contend with, he made several fine stops on partial breakaways and was completely screened on the second Wheat King goal.

Winger Ray Allison scored it at 5:56 of the final period to pull the Manitoba club into a 2-2 deadlock. Allison fired the puck directly after Bill Derlago had cleanly won a faceoff to the left of the Cougar net.

McCrimmon scored the other Brandon goal, slapping the puck and Bannerman's glove into the net after a scramble in the goalmouth early in the second period.

Defenceman Rick Hendericks, probably the most improved of the Cougar holdovers in the early going, tied the score at 1-1 later in the period and Archie Henderson, making his first start after serving a 17-game suspension ordered by a provincial court judge, was the other Victoria marksman.

Henderson parked his six-five, 215-pound frame in front of Hanlon and despite efforts of two defenceman, got his stick on a shot from the point and deflected the puck into the net. It came after only 50 seconds of the third period and was the only powerplay goal of the well-played game.

Hanlon made several big stops in the final minute when Cougars held a man advantage for 31 seconds and finished with 32 saves, seven more than Bannerman.

The result moved the Cougars one point up on second-place New Westminster Bruins in the Western Division while the Wheat Kings had their Eastern Division lead reduced by a point.

Saskatoon Blades topped the visiting Flin Flon Bombers 10-6 in the only other Tuesday game and moved to within 15 points of the Wheat Kings.

Knee damage permanent Orr must assess future

The 28-year-old Orr, who has won more awards than any other player in National Hockey League history, has been ordered to rest his knee for at least two weeks. Doctors will examine it again then.

Orr underwent another arthroscopy — flushing out of the joint — at Toronto General Hospital Tuesday for removal of pieces of cartilege and tissue that had broken away from the lining of the knee joint.

"The joint is permanently damaged," said Dr. John Palmer, Orr's physician. "The knee now has only a certain number of miles left in it and it's up to him to decide how he's going to use those miles."

Dr. Palmer said Orr, who signed a $3 million contract with the Chicago Black Hawks last June after 10 seasons with the Boston Bruins, has been "considering leaving hockey but hasn't yet reached a decision."

The doctor said "if he wants to carry on playing, with the odd flushing out of the joint, we'll be happy to do this for him." But, he warned, if Orr continues playing hockey his knee will get worse.

He said the left knee has already suffered such severe damage that "it will cause varying problems later on." He acknowledged there was a danger the knee — operated on five times — could become permanently stiff.

The doctor said Orr had been suffering considerable pain in recent weeks and that his knee had been "catching on him, locking on him, giving way — just not functioning at all."

He said if Orr decided to continue his career it was imperative that he reduce both the number of games and practice sessions.

Dr. Palmer said Orr's knee was afflicted by "degenerative arthritis caused by injury" and differed from the more common spontaneous inflamation of joints suffered by many persons.

He said in the arthroscopy performed Tuesday a lighted instrument was inserted into the knee joint and revealed that fragments of cartilege had worn away from the lining of the bone.

"This reflects a degeneration of the bone in the knee," he said. "The knee has been worsening by the use of it in hockey. Playing will add to the wear and tear on the joint."

"I had thought at the time of the last arthroscopy, about six months ago, that there would be the possibility he could be able to play for a few years, but this now has to be modified," he said. The doctor could not say whether Orr would be able to play for even a year or two.

He said Orr was "concerned but optimistic" about the turn for the worse. He said Orr had been buoyed by his playing ability during the six-nation Canada Cup series and had looked forward to a good season.

"I don't think it matters much now if he plays because the deterioration is so advanced," Dr. Palmer said. "He's so anxious to play that he will if he's physically able."

Only two NHL games were scheduled Tuesday night and Pittsburgh Penguins and New York Islanders posted wins.

The Penguins, with only 7597 home fans looking on, scored their first win in seven games as Syl Apps and Rick Kehoe scored two goals each in a 7-1 victory over Los Angeles Kings. Penguins scored one short-handed goal and four power-play goals, the latter equalling a team record.

The Islanders erupted for three unanswered goals in the third period and wound up 5-1 winners over the Colorado Rockies in Denver where 4093 fans were in attendance.

Eagleson refutes Campbell's claim

TORONTO (CP) — Alan Eagleson, chairman of Canada Cup 1976, said Tuesday that he is flabbergasted over statements made by Clarence Campbell which labelled the Canada Cup "a waste."

The president of the National Hockey League was quoted last week in Montreal to the effect that the Canada Cup drained the community by taking millions out of peoples' pockets to pay overseas teams to come here, and very little of the money ever finds its way back into hockey in North America.

"That is a ridiculous statement and is no reflection of the fact," Eagleson said.

He claimed that the net receipts from the September tournament will be more than $2.2 million, of which 50 per cent goes to amateur hockey in Canada and the other 50 per cent goes to the pension funds of the National Hockey League and World Hockey Association.

In addition, Eagleson said, the Montreal Forum received in excess of $400,000 for arena rentals and Maple Leaf Gardens was paid in excess of $250,000.

He pointed out that the only money that went out of North America was contained in the prize money paid to the European teams, approximately $250,000.

"Mr. Campbell is absolutely wrong when he suggests that we take money out of the community," he said. "The net results of the Canada Cup was that it brought millions of dollars into community businesses."

Mid-game spree wins for Bucks

The Buckaroos scored six straight goals, including five in the second period, on the way to posting an 8-6, decision over the Maple Leafs in a South Island Big Six Hockey League game at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Victoria had led, 3-0, early in the first period.

Randy Krantz had two goals and three assists for the Buckaroos, Bob Nicholson and Rick Piechotta scored twice each and Garth Cunningham and Dave Pettinger counted once each.

Al Decker and Kerry Brewster scored twice each for Victoria and Brent Davis scored once.

Murray Kennett, a former defenceman with Edmonton Oilers of the World Hockey Association and Victoria Cougars, scored once and assisted once in his debut with the Maple Leafs.

Little lefthander wins Young Award for NL

NEW YORK (AP) — Randy Jones, the little lefthander who won 22 games for San Diego Padres last season, was named winner of the National League's Cy Young Award Tuesday by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Jones, who narrowly lost last year's award—emblematic of pitching supremacy — to Tom Seaver of New York Mets, drew 15 of the 24 first-place votes in balloting by a committee composed of two baseball writers from each of the 12 National League cities.

That easily outdistanced runner-up Jerry Koosman of the Mets, who drew seven first-place votes. Mets teammate Jon Matlack and Don Sutton of Los Angeles Dodgers received one first-place vote apiece.

Jones, a five-foot-11, 180-pounder currently recovering from off-season arm surgery which threatens his career, also received six second-place votes and three third-place votes in the election.

He was the only one mentioned on each ballot, collecting 96 points. Koosman, a left-hander, had 69½ points with Sutton third at 25½.

Balloting by the BBWAA was on a points system with five for first place, three for second and one for third.

Left-hander Steve Carlton of the NL East Division champion Philadelphia Phillies received 11 points; Rawly Eastwick, reliever for the world champion Cincinnati Reds got six points; southpaw Matlack got five, J. R. Richard of Houston Astros had two points and Seaver got one point. Four of the eight pitchers to receive points were left-handers.

Jones sprinted to 16 triumphs in his first 19 decisions but fell sharply after the all-star break to finish at 22-14. Koosman charged at the end to bring his record to 21-10, his first 20-victory season. Sutton also finished with 21 triumphs in his first 20-victory season.

Jones' faltering second-half performance had been caused by trouble with a nerve in the biceps tendon of his left arm.

"I couldn't make a muscle," Jones recalled Tuesday, reflecting on his 6-11 finish. "The doctor said the nerve had been fatigued to the point that it wasn't working. Everything I had worked for the last two years could have gone up in smoke."

There was a possibility that tendons from his right arm would have to be transplanted to his left — a procedure similar to the one survived by the Dodgers' Tommy John.

Fortunately for Jones, that didn't prove necessary.

Leaders take lumps

Bob Liddington scored two goals as Phoenix Roadrunners upended Quebec Nordiques, 5-3, before a crowd of 8488 at Quebec City and brilliant goaltending by Wayne Rutledge enabled Houston Aeros to edge Winnipeg Jets, 5-3, before a crowd of 7813 at Winnipeg.

It was only the third defeat in 12 games for the Nordiques, leaders of the league and the East Division with 18 points.

Clay Hebenton, son of former NHL and WHL star Andy Hebenton, made 29 stops in the Phoenix goal and Richard Brodeur stopped 29 shots for Quebec.

At Winnipeg, Rutledge was outstanding, particularly when the Aeros were shorthanded for four straight minutes in the second period, as the Jets outshot the Aeros 37-29.

In other games: Lynn Powis scored with 1:44 remaining to give Calgary Cowboys a 4-3 win over visiting Minnesota Fighting Saints; and Gary Veneruzzo scored in overtime to give the San Diego Mariners a 4-3 win over the Bulls at Birmingham.

Tempers flare as Braves win

Saanich Braves and Juan de Fuca King John Gulls will be short manpower in their next South Island Junior "B" Hockey League games.

Both teams will be minus three players in their next games because of fights that marred the third period of the Braves' 7-3 triumph over the Gulls Tuesday before a paid crowd of 286 at George Pearkes Arena.

Brent Patterson, Wayne Larsen and Dan Stewart of the Braves and Bill Kersch, Steve Saunders and Col Campbell of the Gulls drew fighting majors and received automatic one-game suspensions.

A league spokesman said further action may be taken. A total of 130 minutes in penalties were handed out.

The third-place Gulls play the second-place Legion Friday at Esquimalt while the Braves are in Lake Cowichan the same night to play Bairds' Trucking.

The first period ended 1-1, Tuesday but Saanich led, 4-3, after two periods.

Top speedway officials retire

Western Speedway lost two of its most valuable assets when manager Reg Midgley and assistant manager Barry Rankin announced their retirements.

The hard-working Speedway veterans made the announcements at a meeting of the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association Tuesday night.

Midgley has been associated with the Speedway since 1957 and under his company Reg Midgley Inc. has been directly responsible for the operation of the Speedway since 1966.

Rankin, who has been associated with the Speedway for 15 years, was offered the managing job but declined because he is now working full time in Midgley's auto business and won't have the time necessary to run the Speedway.

"In the summer it's (running the Speedway) a full time job," said Rankin. "It takes six or seven days and three nights a week."

Midgley and Rankin plan to continue arranging international events for the Speedway and Midgley will remain as a controller for the International Drivers Challenge series and as a director of the Speedway.

Both have said they will assist wherever possible at the Speedway and will carry on tasks in a restricted capacity and retain their memberships in VITRA.

The Speedway, which is coming off one of its worst seasons ever, will find it difficult to replace the experienced duo. Their loss could be a major blow to the future of the Langford Oval.

The 1976 season was severely affected by weather — 15 of the 30 events were rained out or threatened by rain — increased ferry fares and the retirement of several popular drivers.

Three other key employees, the head ticket seller, the head starter and the accountant, have retired this year which means a big rebuilding job for whomever steps into the shoes of Midgley and Rankin.

Maude handles success with air close to aplomb

Excitement can be great, but there is no feeling which can quite match that of a quiet satisfaction.

It brings, Maude Neygh discovered on Tuesday, a special kind of jubilation which in itself is exciting. Maude, you see, was luxuriating in that sense of well being which comes to winners.

Maude is a winner, and as astounding as that may seem it is not nearly as surprising as the manner in which the horse-playing Saanich housewife handled herself on her biggest-ever day at Sandown Park.

And it was a real tester. Maude, whose $200 Sandown poke dwindled, slowly but so very surely, to $149.95 during the first seven days of the 16-day thoroughbred meeting, went home Monday night with $220.80.

Maude got down $58 of the $68 she meant to bet Monday, being forced to sit out the sixth race because Mr. Bradley was scratched. But she made her $5-to-win $5-to-place wagers on Dontbefancynancy, Tickety Toc, Quadra Isle and Blinkey Ben, bought a $6 combination on Willie's Mark and played a 2-4-6 quinella round-robin on the third and fifth races.

She thought for a spell that she might have become clairvoyant. Dontbefancynancy won the first race the way an odd-on favorite should win, then Tickety Toc cracked down as a 4-1 winner of the second and the 2-4-6 quinella paid off in the third race when Hola Magic (6) and Gallant Dave (2) finished in that order to bring $27.70.

Maude got most of her money back when Quadra Island finished second in the fourth race, and she got a last good score when Willie's Mark won the sixth with a tremendous late rush. The 2-4-6 thing didn't pay off in the fifth race and Blinkey Ben took in the last race as a spectator but Maude had cashed tickets worth $101.75 and her profit for the day was $43.75.

Maude handled it all with a serenity which bordered on aplomb. Perhaps it was because she became quite embarrassed when she read an account of her attention-getting antics during her Saturday successes, but more likely it was because she showed her true mettle when she decided to jazz up her betting a bit when three successive losing days had wiped out a good start and left her with only $149.95 for the last nine days.

That decision resulted in an abrupt change in fortune. She won Friday and Saturday and started Monday with her poke at $177.05, and herself under control. Whatever did it, Maude accepted good fortune with grace on Monday, and she had to be asked if you wanted to know how she was faring.

Now, pressures gone, Maude is really going to enjoy the last six days. For today she's going to bet $5-$5 on Penngar in the first race, Brofield in the second, Reflector in the third, Strong Item in the fourth and Win Bram in the fifth. Caution gone, she'll then give in to a meet-long desire and play Successful Road to the board in the sixth-race quinella, and she'll do the same with Dark Summer if Autumn Glen doesn't draw into the seventh. And as a final touch, she's going to round-robin Solar Drive, Winnikim and Cockle Barry in the eighth-race Exactor.

Maude has indeed changed a bit, and if she gets out of it today a $10 seller is going to get at least one look at her this year.

Reynolds hopes dimmed by loss to Mount Doug

Reynolds Roadrunners hopes for a fourth straight high-school soccer league title were all but dashed Tuesday.

Gary White scored twice and Mike Murray once as the Mt. Douglas Thistles upset the Roadrunners, 3-2, in the Greater Victoria League match at Reynolds.

Defeat left the Roadrunners tied with Oak Bay Bays but the Bays have a game remaining. Even if they lose to Vic High Tyees Friday the Bays would share the Times Trophy with Reynolds but would probably earn the B.C. championship berth for having allowed fewer goals. Oak Bay has allowed only eight goals to Reynolds 17.

Reynolds wasn't able to recover from early defensive lapses Tuesday. The Roadrunners were behind, 3-0, early in the first half but Brian Dominique and Lou Garroway scored to make it, 3-2, by half time.

In the other Division I match, Vic High kept alive in its bid for a spot in the Colonist Cup semi-finals by edging Spectrum, 2-1, at Spectrum.

Dave Williams and Ian Bridge scored for the Tyees and Barry Jones connected for Spectrum.

Vic High is last in the Division I but is only one point behind fourth-place Spectrum and two behind Mt. Douglas. Spectrum and Mt. Douglas meet Friday at Spectrum.

In a Division II game at Parkland all the scoring came in the first half as Claremont Spartans edged the Panthers, 3-2. John Clarke scored twice and Glen Prevost once for Claremont and Avie Stubbington and Daryl Stubbs scored for Parkland.

International meet

City gymnast ties for third

TORONTO (CP) — Teodora Ungureanu of Romania, double medal winner at the Montreal Olympics, won the women's over-all title and awards on three individual apparatuses Tuesday night at an international gymnastics meet.

Ungureanu, 15, who won a silver medal in the uneven bars and a bronze in the balance beam at Montreal, won both these events as well as the floor exercise — with a meet-high score of 9.7 to finish with 38.10 points and first place. Andrea Bieger of East Germany was second with 37.20 points and Anna Pohludkova of Czechoslovakia was third with 36.95 points.

Koji Gushiken, a 20-year-old student from Japan, won the men's over-all title, finishing with 56.75 points, including wins in the rings, vault and high bar.

Jiri Tabak of Czechoslovakia was second with 56.05 points. Eberhard Gienger of East Germany, the defending men's over-all champion, finished in a tie for third with Philip Delesalle of Victoria at 54.45 points.

Delesalle, making his first appearance since the Montreal Olympics, finished first in his specialty — the pommel horse — with a score of 9.5 and took the parallel bars with a score of 9.4. It was Delesalle's best-ever performances.

Nigel Rothwell of Windsor, Ont., the 19-year-old Ontario champion, was last over-all of the 10 competitors in the men's competition.

Elfi Schlegal of Toronto was fourth over-all in the women's competition. Schlegal, 12, finished tied for top spot in the vault with Bieger. Each received scores of 9.4.

A crowd of 16,257 saw 20 competitors from 10 countries take part in the meet at Maple Leaf Gardens.

Field hockey

Stage all set for B.C. event

Spectrum, Oak Bay, Mt. Douglas and Norfolk House are the Victoria teams in the 20-team tournament which runs from Thursday through Saturday at Lansdowne Junior High School.

Victoria annually provides top-calibre teams and this year has produced four teams of almost equal high calibre.

Spectrum, which includes high-scoring Pam Kozak (26 goals this season), in its line-up, edged Oak Bay, 1-0, to win the Victoria title, but the championship final was the only one of the four playoff games involving the four teams that didn't go into overtime.

Oak Bay, the reigning B.C. champion, and Mt. Douglas had the best defensive records and were unbeaten in league play this season. Mt. Douglas which allowed only one goal in league play, finished one point ahead of Oak Bay, which allowed four goals in 11 games, and Spectrum, the highest scoring team with 45 goals.

Norfolk House is led by Nina Bland, the leading scorer last season and top playoff scorer this year.

The tournament opens with round-robin play in four divisions of five teams each. The top two teams in each division advance to the playoffs.

Division alignments are: "A" — Spectrum; Burnaby South; Salmon Arm; Sir Winston Churchill; Quesnel; "B" — Mt. Douglas; Burnaby North; Point Grey; Castlegar; Chilliwack; "C" — Norfolk House; Magee; Kelowna; Cowichan; Cranbrook; "D"— Oak Bay; Rutland; Hansworth; Centennial; Prince of Wales.

Following is the round-robin draw for Victoria teams:

Thursday

10 a.m. — Norfolk House vs Magee.

11 a.m. — Mt. Douglas vs Burnaby North; Spectrum vs Burnaby South.

12 noon — Oak Bay vs Rutland.

Friday

9 a.m. — Mt. Douglas vs Chilliwack.

10 a.m. — Norfolk House vs Cranbrook.

11 a.m. — Spectrum vs Salmon Arm.

1 p.m. — Spectrum vs Quesnel; Oak Bay vs Hansworth; Norfolk House vs Kelowna.

Water release will aid spawning salmon

alec merriman

Greater Victoria Water Board will be releasing water into the Goldstream this week to make it easier for the salmon to swim to their spawning grounds.

And thanks to the volunteer efforts of high-school students and other conservation-minded citizens spearheaded by the Amalgamated Conservation Society the Goldstream is ready for them.

It should be an ideal weekend to watch the annual salmon run in the Goldstream.

But, much more important is the work that has been done to prepare for them in an effort to double the coho production of the Goldstream.

The main run is chum (dog) salmon . . . and they are the ones with the bars on their sides.

Only a few (50 to 200) coho salmon and even fewer chinooks run to the Goldstream, but it is the coho that pass through Saanich Inlet that mainly interest sports fishermen. They turn reddish as they become ready to spawn.

The ACS for the past three years has operated a 50,000 egg capacity incubation box in the upper reaches of the Goldstream with spectacular success.

It has also built a side channel to double as a spawning channel at this time of year and a rearing channel in summer months for the increased number of coho fry resulting from the incubation box production.

Esquimalt High School students under biology teacher Jack Nicolichuck and Cedar Hill junior secondary students under teachers John Fray and Glen Marriott have been active in helping the ACS and Pacific Trollers in Golded a fence on the Goldstream stream projects.

They have recently romplet- which will trap the spawning coho to be sorted as they head upstream. Some will be allowed to escape to spawn naturally and some will be kept to give eggs for the incubation boxes.

The side channel, built last year, has been improved to withstand floods. Last year it accommodated 27 spawners with 19 reds, and more coho are expected to use it this year.

This past summer ACS members have been building pilot pools in tributary streams to provide winter habitat for fry.

UVic student Bob Griffiths, who is writing his thesis on winter survival of fry, has been helping and advising on the project and keeping records of fry survival.

It has been found that there is a much greater winter survival rate of fry in the small tributary streams of rivers than in the main flow streams, which are more susceptible to floods.

The new rearing channel in the Goldstream was hit by floods last year when high water hit a 30-year high, but even so it managed to provide safety for 4300 fry. This year it is hoped three to five times that number will survive in the improved channel.

Last spring the students built traps in the rearing channel to facilitate the counting of the fry as they headed out to migrate to sea and to keep the natural fry out of the channel.

To date none of the spawning coho have reached the fence at the Goldstream, but with water releases scheduled this week it is a matter of any day now.

At Sooke it is a different story, There is no reservoir from which to release water and they are desperately waiting for rain to bring up the parched rivers.

When it comes, Jack Brooks reports, the Sooke Conservation Society, with its volunteer workers from commercial fishermen, loggers, students, sports fishermen, and other individuals, will be ready.

They will take enough coho from Demamiel Creek to fill the two 50,000-egg incubation boxes they operate.

ONE OF CANADA'S LOWEST PRICED CARS IS ALSO ONE OF CANADA'S BEST-EQUIPPED.

The Toyota Corolla is the best-selling car in the world. And, while it is not (quite) the lowest-priced car you can buy, it costs many hundreds of dollars less than the average car sold today.

It is so completely equipped that the only available options are a radio and radial tires.

It is so meticulously built, so thoroughly tested that more than 8 out of every 10 sold in this country over the past 10 years are still on the road.

It is additionally tested for winter toughness in Northern Canada (one more reason why it retains such a high re-sale value).

And, right now, you can take advantage of special factory trading allowances on Toyota Corolla 1200 so the car that's already one of the lowest priced in Canada could cost you even less.

Think about all the reasons why you buy a car, then think about Toyota Corolla, the car bought by more people than any other model in the whole wide world. TOYOTA

Record-shattering runner wants Heisman Trophy

NEW YORK (AP) — Tony Dorsett admits it would be "distasteful" to him if he is beaten out again this year for the Heisman Trophy, symbol of being the top college football player in the country.

"I thought I deserved to win it in my freshman year," Pittsburgh's record-shattering runner says. "So, you see, this is the fourth year I have been a candidate.

"When Archie Griffin won last year, I was disappointed. I can't say it left a good taste in my mouth. Now, if I lose again, considering all I've done, it would be more distasteful than a year ago."

The 5-foot-11, 190-pound running back from Aliquippa, Pa., already has gained more yards rushing than any college ball carrier who ever lived — 5447 yards, with three games yet to be played.

A workhorse, he also has set the all-time mark for career rushes, 965: has become the only player to exceed 1000 yards a year for four seasons and the first to gain 1500 or more yards over two campaigns, with a third a certainty.

Red Grange never did it. Tom Harmon never did it. Neither did such all-time greats as Jay Berwanger, Jim Brown, Ernie Davis and O. J. Simpson.

"O. J. always has been my hero," Dorsett said during a fly-in, fly-out appearance at the New York Football Writers' weekly luncheon. "O. J. and Gale Sayers. I never saw Jim Brown except in the movies. I haven't patterned my running style after anybody."

Dorsett said he was a freshman in high school when he started following O. J. Simpson's exploits at the University of Southern California.

"That was the first time I ever heard of the Heisman Trophy," he said. "I never dreamed that some day I would have a shot at it."

As a freshman in 1973, Dorsett ran for 1586 yards, racking up a record 265 in the game against Northwestern. John Cappelletti of Penn State won the Heisman. Then came Ohio State's Archie Griffin, winning in 1974 and 1975 although Dorsett had phenomenal statistics on a less successful team. Tony finished fourth last year.

"I am not concerned about records," the Pittsburgh runner said. "I don't think about numbers — like whether I will reach 6000 yards.

"But since football is going to be my career, I want to win the Heisman Trophy. It's the same as a doctor or a lawyer wanting to win a Rhodes Scholarship.

"It would be a good feeling for me. Years from now, I could show my kids and family that I was up there with the best."

B.C. quartet wins Vernon carspiel

VERNON (CP) — Tony Eberts, of Williams Lake, edged Bob Pickering, of Milestone, Sask., 6-4 late Monday in the championship game of the third annual Vernon bonspiel. Each member of his rink takes home a compact car for the win.

Eberts, the defending Canadian mixed champion, scored one in the fifth and seventh ends and two in the ninth and twelth en route to the win. Pickering scored aces in the third, sixth, eighth and tenth ends.

For his second-place finish, Pickering, who has represented Saskatchewan in the Brier six times, wins $3,200. Vernon's Doug Chilton won third-place money of $1,600 with a 7-6 win over John Usackis of Winnipeg. Usackis picked up $1,200.

In the semi-finals, Pickering scored two in the twelth end to edge Chilton 6-5, while Eberts stole two in the tenth en route to a 10-7 victory over Usackis.

In the quarter finals, Eberts beat Jim Armstrong of Vancouver 9-3; Pickering trounced Bernie Sparkes of Vancouver 8-2; Usackis edged Ron Northcott of Calgary 7-6; and Chilton dumped defending champion George Fink of Calgary 9-5.

Thirty-two rinks took part in the four-day event.

CBS dropping pro soccer

After studying unusually low Neilsen ratings for last year's televised games, CBS has decided not to pick up its option on the remainder of a three-year contract with the North American Soccer League.

This year, CBS had televised two games, but both had very low audience participation. Under its option-laden contract with the NASL, CBS was to televise a minimum of six games in 1977 and a minimum of nine in 1978.

Plans underway for series between hockey champs

TORONTO (CP) — Alan Eagleson said Tuesday that an eight-game series between the Stanley Cup champions and the European champions is in the works for November and December of 1977.

Eagleson, named Monday as Hockey Canada's chief negotiator for the next four years, said that discussions on the series with the European hockey nations were at "an interesting stage." Eagleson and National Hockey League president Clarence Campbell will travel to Europe either late this month or in early December to resume the negotiations.

The series, with four games in Canada and four games in Europe, is tentatively scheduled for Nov. 20 to Dec. 10, 1977.

Eagleson said that he and Campbell have discussed a formula which would allow the 1976-77 Stanley Cup champions to play only 72 games in an 80-game schedule in the 1977-78 season, thus accommodating their participation in the series.

"The champions would play a 72-game schedule, after which bonus points would be added onto their 72-game point total on a percentage basis," he said.

Eagleson also said that he is negotiating a similar January-February, 1978, series between the champions of the World Hockey Association and the European runners-up.

The Canada Cup series, the first of which was played in September, will not be renewed until 1980, he said.

Eagleson warned Canadians that an overabundance of international hockey will be harmful to the game on the home front and, indeed, could destroy it.

"We have to be very careful not to destroy the amateur and professional leagues in North America by having too many international games," he said. "As an example of overkill, there will be more than 35 games in North America between Dec. 5, 1976, and Jan. 10, 1977, which involve Soviet and Czechoslovakian teams. This is too much international competition during that short period of time."

He said that the NHL has turned down proposals by the Soviets and the Czechoslovakians for tours of NHL cities this season.

Eight players top 100-point mark

TORONTO (CP) — With one weekend remaining the the Canadian Football league schedule, a record eight players have hit the 100 mark in scoring points.

All of the 100-point scorers are kickers and Ken Clark of Hamilton Tiger-Cats is the only regular place-kicker not at or over the century mark.

Don Sweet of Montreal Alouettes leads the way with 133 points followed by Bernie Ruoff of Winnipeg Blue Bombers, 131; 1976 scoring champion Dave Cutler of Edmonton Eskimos, 126; Bob Macoritti, Saskatchewan Roughriders, 124; Lui Passaglia, B.C. Lions 119; Cyrill McFall, Calgary Stampeders, 111; Gerry Organ, Ottawa Roughriders, 110; and Zenon Adrusyshyn, Toronto Argonauts, 100.

Clark is sixth in the East and 13th over-all with 74 points.

The top non-kickers are Jim Washington of Winnipeg and Tony Gabriel of Hamilton with 14 touchdowns and 84 points each.

In rushing, four players have passed the 1000-yard mark and Jimmy Edwards of Hamilton needs only five more yards to reach 1000.

Washington leads with 1260 yards on 215 carries. Art Green of Ottawa is next with 1220 on 222 runs while Mike Strickland of B.C. Lions has 1022 on 206 carries and Andy Hopkins of Montreal Alouettes has 1007 yards on 201 carries.

Donna leading

MINO, Japan (AP) — Donna Caponi Young of the United States fired a three-under-par 71 Tuesday and took a three-stroke lead after two rounds of the $100,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association Mizuno Classic.

The round gave the 31-year-old Young a three-under-par 145 for 36 holes over the 6,925-yard, par-74 Hanayashiki Golf Club course in western Japan.

First-round leader Beth Stone of the U.S., shooting a three-over-par 77, slipped to second place with a 148 total. Japan's top woman pro, Hisako "Chako" Higuchi, was third at 149 after a second-round 77.

In fourth place was Japan's Noriko Kobayashi with a 150 total. Tied for fifth at 151 were Sandra Post, a native of Oakville, Ont., now living in Florida, Sally Little of Ireland, Pat Bradley of the United States and Michiko Okada of Japan. Post shot a second-round 73 to go with her first-round 78, Little and Bradley had 74s and Okada a 78.

Defending champion Shelly Hamlin of the United States was in a 26th-place tie at 156.

A field of 70 leading women golfers is competing in the 54-hole tournament, which carries a first prize of $15,000.

Coopman KOs Canadian

Coopman dominated the fight from the opening bell. His superior speed over the Canadian, who weighed 211, against Coopman's 193½, enabled the Belgian to hit Jerome almost at will. Jerome is the No. 1 challenger for semi-retired George Chuvalo's Canadian championship.

Coopman, who lost to world champion Muhammad Ali earlier in the year, took several heavy hits from the Canadian in the second round but countered with powerful rights that drew blood from Jerome's nose. Coopman went after the shakey Jerome in the third round and in the fourth caught the Canadian with another barrage of rights that broke his nose. Jerome sprawled on the canvas as the referee counted him out.

Land-hogging could bring penalties

Beware, municipalities!

By JIM HUME
Colonist Reporter

Municipalities failing to meet future housing requirements will face loss of provincial government grants.

B.C. Housing Minister Hugh Curtis said Tuesday he would not hesitate to impose such a penalty "next year or the year after if it is necessary."

Curtis made the statement during a press conference called to make public the report of the joint committee on housing. Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf was chairman of the 12-man committee.

While waving the big stick at municipalties which fail to meet provincially-designated housing targets, the 27-page report contains another recommendation stating that local governments should be "permitted unfettered control over land use."

Curtis admitted that municipal councils might be angry when dictated to by senior government, "but that's the way it will have to be" if the municipality had land it was withholding from the housing market.

And the report states that there are municipalities throughout the province deliberately withholding land from housing developers in order to obtain premium prices.

Both Curtis and Bawlf declined to identify the municipalities trying to make speculative profits from the housing shortage.

Both ministers claimed the main thrust of the report and its recommendations was to cut a maze of red tape now confronting developers of housing.

"That is the fundamental recommendation," Curtis said. "That the activities of government — provincial, municipal and federal — be reorgainized to ensure the efficient, competitive production of housing, and thus help reduce the end cost to the consumer, a cost that is currently inflated by the red tape jungle."

But the report goes far beyond recommendations to streamline procedures. It lays down guidelines and recommendations which would eliminate land-use contracts, phase out rent control programs and place the decision on how many new homes a municipality should provide each year squarely in the hands of the provincial government.

On land-use contracts, the report states that "many municipalties are applying this procedure universally to establish a second level of taxation in the form of impost fees and servicing charges and to extract various extraordinary conditions. Applicants for relatively ordinary land-use approvals are being required to negotiate their projects through an increasingly complex maze of boards, committees, advisory panels, staff offices and council meetings."

As a result, the report claims, many would-be housing developments become bogged down in a morass of red tape for as long as two years at great cost to the developer and ultimately the consumer.

The report recommends that:

- Land-use contract legislation be repealed as of July 1, 1978.
- All zoning prescribe the basic uses and over-all density permitted for development.
- That public hearings be held at the start of negotiations but on land-use only and not on details of the development.

Both ministers said they were not trying to bypass public hearings. "We are trying to shorten proceedings, not short circuit them," Curtis said.

"Objections raised at public hearings often extend far beyond the competence of the objectors, into matters of detailed design, obscuring the basic question of suitability of land use," the report states. "And objections are rarely offset by adequate input on behalf of housing needs. Public hearings should occur much earlier in the approval process and be confined to the basic question of land use."

To eliminate the problem of the lack of expertise on housing the report proposes that the government make available on request an expert "housing advocate" to present a neutral point of view related to need.

The report leaves no doubt that its authors oppose rent controls.

"Rent controls have distorted the market place," it states. "With rents on most accommodation held down arbitrarily against the rising costs of land, construction and operation, rents have been unwilling to pay the eonomic rent associated with new accommodation."

The report also claims that rental accommodation throughout the province is becoming more available following the introduction of the government's Assisted Rental Program.

"As vacancy rates increase, competition among landlords for tenants tends to eliminate the possibility of unnecessary rent increases, obviating the need for rent controls. Therefore, as rental housing of a type or in an area approaches an adequate vacancy rate, there should be a definite timetable for phasing out rent controls," the report states.

While recommending the phasing out of rent controls the report calls for:

- A program of financial aid to upgrade and operate older low rental accommodation.
- Increased shelter allowances to those whose incomes are unable to keep up with rent increases.
- Amendment of the Municipal Act to enable councils to zone land exclusively for rental housing.

The housing committee said it had considered the possibility of land supply prices being controlled by companies in a monopoly, but had discovered that only "government" appeared to be in a monopoly.

"No evidence was found to suggest that any private company or conglomerate controlled enough land in any market (to control prices)," the report stated.

"The closest thing to this was, in fact, found to be the public sector which owns large quantities of land suitable for housing and appears to have held too much of it off the market. This has been true, not only of the province, but also of certain municipalities which hold substantial land banks and appear content to place only small amounts into production at premium prices."

In order to increase the supply of land the report recommends:

- The development of provincial and municipal lands for housing geared to more efficient land use.
- Provincial financing of municipal services and revenue sharing in aid of growth to be keyed to more efficient land use.
- An intensive public education program aimed at wider acceptance of more efficient land use.

The report holds little hope of long-range survival for the single family dwelling.

"More efficient, that is denser, land use also means, under competitive conditions, lower costs per dwelling. In the short run this is a key to closing the affordability gap."

The final recommendation in the report calls for a streamlining of building regulations into one building code.

"Building standards and practices are governed by a multiplicity of codes and legislation, including the National Building Code, the B.C. Plumbing Code, the Fire Marshal's Act, the Factories Act and the Workers' Compensation Act," the report states. "The requirements of these various codes are interpreted and administered from day to day by a phalanx of building, plumbing, electrical, fire, hydro and CMHC inspectors, among others. Builders complain that these inspectors are frequently confused, autocratic and ill-coordinated, resulting in numerous delays and revisions when the production process should be at its most productive stage."

Police skirts to hide knees

TOKYO (AP) — Skirts of Japanese policewomen will henceforth cover the knee, largely because some policemen say it is difficult not to observe the knees of their female colleagues. Skirts for Japan's 6,600 policewomen now will be about two inches below the knees. Skirts of Tokyo policewomen now average about two inches above the knee. Authorities said male police have admitted to being tempted to look.

Housing control to regions?

Municipalities in B.C. will lose a great deal of control over housing developments if the provincial government accepts five major recommendations from a special committee on housing.

The committee, led by Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf states that many municipal councils "are naturally more concerned with protecting the interests of the existing population who elect them, than welcoming newcomers."

As a result the committee report recommends that the Municipal Act be amended to give the minister power to tell a region board how many housing units are required in the region.

Needs allocated to councils

Have received that message, the region would "allocate these requirements among its component municipalities and areas."

The municipality would have the right to appeal any such decision to the minister who issued the first order.

Municipalities wouldn't lose all of their powers. If the reports recommendations are adopted, a municipal council would still have the right to "plan to meet the requirements" laid down by the minister and the regional district.

The municipality would also be expected to "pre-zone sufficient land to meet three years projected requirements at any time" and to "provide in community plans for an adequate supply of land to meet 10-years projected requirements."

And both the regional district and the municipality would get special funds to help their respective duties.

Failure to meet the standards laid down could result in a ministerial decision to "withhold municipal grants for failure to comply with these recommendations."

Earlier the report states: "Local governments, with their detailed knowledge, are best equipped to consider these various concerns (on housing) in balance and render an even-handed decision. They should be permitted unfettered control over land use after getting a community plan with the provincial agencies and departments concerned."

No explanation has been given for the apparent contradiction.

While Bawlf was chairman of the committee his co-authors were: George Kerster (SC—Coquitlam) James Hewitt (SC—Boundary-Similkameen) Mayor Pat Duke, Lumby; Ald. William Vogel, Surrey; William Long, deputy municipal affairs minister; Larry Bell, deputy housing minister; Jeff McKelvey, Union of B.C. Municipalities; Dennis Grant, UBCM; Ted Whelen, municipal affairs department; Jack Williams, housing department and Tom Dykes, executive assistant to Municipal Affairs and Housing minister Hugh Curtis.

'Ill-informed aldermen' control land direction

Who controls land development in B.C. municipalities?

Two or three ill-informed aldermen, states a report by Sam Bawlf, former Victoria alderman, now Recreation and Conservation Minister.

Bawlf and the committee on housing he headed call for changes in the Municipal Act to introduce "simple majority" council votes when zoning matters are under debate.

Under existing rules, two-thirds of the council members present are required to get a zoning application through.

"Control therefore rests in the hands of a minority of two or three aldermen who may be variously ill-informed, anti-development, or playing politics," the Bawlf report states.

"Applications are sometimes defeated or re-routed back through the process for reasons which defy anticipation. Majority rule should be restored to the approval process."

Police seize forged art

ROME (AP) — Police raided an apartment in Florence on Saturday that they said was used as a "laboratory" for forging paintings and seized 741 canvasses falsely attributed to prominent Italian artists.

At Esquimalt's Matson Lodge

Students provide zest of youth

By KING LEE
Colonist Reporter

Teenagers are a rare sight at Matson Lodge in Esquimalt, but 10 students at nearby Harbour View shool are doing their best to take the zest of youth into the home.

Every Wednesday morning, during a one-hour activities period, teacher Pat Akerly takes 10 students to the lodge to "communicate" with the residents.

The program has just begun but Ethel Armistead, wife of administrator Eedson Armistead, said the residents find the students enjoyable.

They join in sing-songs, talk with the older people and even help with letter writing if necessary.

The emphasis is on one-to-one contact, although Miss Akerly admits it's more like two-to-one at the beginning because some of the volunteer students feel uncomfortable without some moral support from their friends.

The key word is "communication," and some of the students put their thought on paper about their contact with the other side of the generation gap.

Here are some of their observations:

"My feelings toward the elderly are that they need us as part-time grandhildren to replace their own grandchildren, who very seldom come to visit. We try to make them happy and feel wanted. I feel more people should take time to talk to the elderly and learn some things you don't from schools."

—Mike McDonald.

"I like going there because I don't have a grandma or grandpa living in Victoria. I expected them to be friendly ... They taught me a lot about where they have lived before Victoria (and) all that happened to them. I don't find it hard to talk to them or to listen."

—Jackie Horrigan.

"When I first went to Matson Lodge, I was kind of scared. But now, every week I want Wednesdays to come — and fast. When I go there, I feel sorry for these people that have no grandchildren living out near the Lodge or have grandchildren who don't bother coming to see them. Before I went, I thought we had to change their clothes (and) clean their rooms. But all we have to do is talk to them. When we talk to them, we learn different things about life before we were born. If I had my way, I would go there every day of my life. Some people are nice and some people are just tired."

—Shelly Hicks.

"When I go to Matson Lodge, I think I can learn about the wars and about the schools in those days and about their lives. When I first joined this program, I expected the old people to be friendly to us. They taught me a lot about their school days and what happened in their life. Relating to these people is like a whole new adventure and this relating is not all that difficult. You just have to have a lot of patience. I think we shoul do some activities with them and entertain them more because all we do is just talk with them."

—Terry Nilson.

"Before I went to Matson Lodge, I felt that the people, because they were elderly, would not be very active or could not participate in games, sing-songs, etc. But after visiting them, I found that some of the people play the piano, play games, pool, cards, do puzzles and the ladies knit and crochet. I feel that they are doing everything possible to occupy themselves and really enjoy our visits — and just enjoy life. From the visits, the residents have taught me that not only the young can have fun, anyone can enjoy life no matter what their age is, if they want to try."

—Susan Streifel.

Exhibition group quits in west

EDMONTON (CP) — The Western Canada Association of Exhibitions was disbanded at its final meeting Saturday. The 10-member association, representing exhibition associations from the Lakehead to the Rocky Mountains, turned over its assets of about $5,000 to the Canadian Association of Exhibitions, based in Toronto. Bill Owen, public relations manager for the Edmonton Exhibition Association, said the decision was made because the group felt it was redundant to have two organizations.

Old Merchants Trading Hall now restored as bank

Asian art expert on visit

She will speak on Chinese ceramics imported to Japan between the ninth and 14th centuries, at 10:30 a.m. Thursday in the gold room of the Commons block at the University of Victoria. The lecture, free of charge and open to the public, is sponsored by the department of history in art.

Miss Tregear teaches Asian art at St. Cross College, Oxford, and visits excavation sites around Hong Kong and on the Chinese mainland.

She was born in China and after receiving formal training at London University and Oxford, returned to live at Central China University in Wuchang, Hupei, from 1947 to 1950. From 1956 to 1961 she was curator of the Museum of Chinese Art and Archeology at the University of Hong Kong.

She is visiting Victoria as consultant at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria and has been asked by Joan Stanley-Baker, curator of Asian art, to catalogue the gallery's ceramic collection for the Asian art wing, scheduled for completion at the end of next year.

Historic San Francisco landmark

Merchants Exchange renovated

By LARRY WOOD
Colonist - Monitor Service

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. — It's not an easy job to get people interested in restoration projects because the endeavor requires both hard work and meticulous research. Also, it is always difficult to determine costs in advance.

These were the ingredients underlying the restoratin of the old Merchants Exchange Trading Hall in San Francisco.

Completely restored at a cost of more than $250,000, the 8,500-square-foot main hall of the building that served as the Bay City's centre of commerce in the early 1900s now is a branch office of the Chartered Bank of London.

Once an important hub of San Francisco's financial district, the building's original trenants were the Marine Exchange, the Grain Exchange, and the Chamber of Commerce. Here was the place where businessmen and tradesmen watched the bay for merchant ships coming to port.

Traders waited in the main hall while spotters used telescopes to sight ships and then to obtain Morse-coded information about their cargoes.

The original Merchants Exchange was a three-storey brick building, built in 1851 on Battery Street, but it was destroyed by fire. The present 15-storey Merchants' Exchange Building was completed in 1906 and is one of the few downtown buildings that survived the San Francisco earthquake that same year without extensive damage.

Designed by Willis Polk with the assistance of California's first woman architect, Julia Morgan, the building that served as a centre of San Francisco's business community was elegant, artistic, and always an architectural standout.

For 20 years, it was the tallest building in the western United States.

But, through the years, tenants began modernization projects that included adding partitions and tearing out walls and moldings, and thus they changed the character of the building.

One of the people who resisted the changes throughout all the years that this "modernization" was taking place was Otto Haake, a German immigrant who had accepted a job as a cabinetmaker in the building in 1943.

For his resourcefulness and dedication to a dream, he now gets plenty of credit. Norman C. Eckersley, chairman of the board of Chartered Bank of London, says that Haake has been an "invaluable source of information for the interior decorators, the painters, carpenters, and architects in their work of faithfully recapturing the original grandeur of the hall."

One thing that could not be saved was the original maple flooring because it had been covered with synthetic tile by former tenants.

But the bank did remove the false ceiling. Then experts in gold leaf restored all the intricately designed surfaces. Throughout the hall, all of the hand-carved wood paneling was carefully stained.

Haake got the original bronze light fixtures and eagle ornaments out of storage; these are now all back in place.

Eight 42-inch round murals, painted by marine artist William Coulter, were cleaned and hung in the former niches. The marble columns, bronze eagles, gold-leafed ceilings, and the skylights are some of the details visitors appreciate.

Eckersley summarized their impact when he says, "The purity reflected in the ornamentation and embellishments throughout are rare contributions to the artistic accomplishments of the period."

Man stabbed in racial tiff

EDMONTON (CP) — A 23-year-old man was recovering in hospital Monday after suffering stab wounds early Sunday in what police described as a racial battle in a downtown hotel. Murji Zahir, who was attending a Tanzanian banquet suffered two stab wounds in the back. Police said the fight, involving about 40 people, was a racial affair between Lebanese, Tanzanians, Pakistanis and Syrians. No charges had been laid.

ann landers

Dear Ann: Sometimes you give pretty good advice. Other times you sound like a rock-head. Your latest example of "rock-headism" was your advice to "Had It." You told her to leave her relatives alone. "If you can't get along with them" (quoth the mighty Landers), "then learn to get along without them."

I'd love to leave my relatives alone but they don't leave me alone. My husband and I haven't been inside my sister's home for two years, yet she and her husband and their two kids come here almost every Sunday — at dinner time. My husband's bachelor brother is a regular at our supper table. The guy can smell a roast a mile away. He never brings so much as a ham hock— just himself and a hearty appetite.

No one ever says "Hello" or "Goodbye," "Thank you" or "Drop dead." And your advice is "Leave them alone." I'd like to know how to pull it off. — Also Had It.

Dear Also: It takes two factions to keep a situation like yours going — a pack of leeches and a gutless wonder who will allow herself to be abused.

Anyone who permits a bunch of freeloaders to behave so outrageously week after week, year after year, must enjoy the role of chump.

If you are really fed up, tell them you don't need the extra work, your food bills are out of sight, and from now on they are not to come over unless invited.

Dear Ann: I'm a 25-year-old woman with a nine-month-old baby. I don't want any more children. One is all I can handle. Rather than stay on the pill, I want to have my tubes cut. My gynecologist agrees it is the safest method of birth control.

My husband wants one more child and he is making my life miserable. We argue constantly over this. Please tell me what to do.—It's My Body.

Dear Body: It is your body, but 25 is awfully young to make such a big decision. A tubal ligation must be viewed as permanent.

If you want to go off the pill, get fitted for a diaphragm. Then give yourself another three years, at least. You may feel differently when your squalling, demanding child is walking and talking and giving you a great deal of pleasure.

Dear Ann Landers: Relatives — Ouch! And the closer they are the more trouble they seem to cause. Please tell us now what to do because Christmas will be here before we know it.

My sister (who has always run the whole family) insists on giving us all very expensive gifts. To be perfectly honest, she can afford it less than the rest of us. She and her family are struggling to make ends meet.

Every year for the last five we've been saying, "This is the last year we are exchanging gifts. Christmas is for the kids. Let's give modest presents to nieces and nephews and skip everyone else."

Then, on Dec. 25, this load of expensive gifts arrives. Of course, we all have go go out and match hers and we're sick of it. What's the solution? — Vicious Circle.

Dear Circ: This year tell her today, October 29, that if she sends gifts for anyone except the kids they will be returned. Keep your word and the problem will be solved.

Soviets develop new flu shots

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has developed a new anti-flu vaccine which Tass news agency calls more effective than previously used inoculations. The dead-virus vaccine, with a gamma globulin base, was developed by researchers in Leningrad, and is on sale in pharmacies in that city, Tass said. The agency did not say when it would be put into general use.

Sodom, Gommorah mentioned

By JOHN DART

Colonist - Los Angeles Times Service

ST. LOUIS — Sodom and Gommorah, the Biblical sin cities often considered more legendary than real, are mentioned in one of the nearly 17,000 clay tablets excavated from an ancient site in northwestern Syria, it was disclosed at a meeting of scholars here.

Aside from passages in Genesis, no other written reference had ever been found to Sodon and Gommorah, which were destroyed by God with fire and brimstone, according to the Bible.

Giovanni Pettinato, one of two University of Rome professors in charge of the excavations, saved that "bombshell" and a couple of others for a lecture before 3,000 religion scholars at their annual meeting.

The tablet discoveries of the last three years at Tel Mardikh have been in the ruins of the royal palace, still only partially uncovered, of the 4,300-year-old Kingdom of Ebla. Once thought to be no more than a large village, Ebla is now emerging as a major Semitic culture of the ancient Near East and the possible locale for some of the earliest Bible history.

Because the oldest written versions of the Old Testament date back only to about the 10th century B.C., the tablets from the Ebla palace (2400 B.C.-2250 B.C.) excited Biblical scholars early this year when it was learned that place names such as Jerusalem and Gaza and personal names such as Abraham and David were found in the tablets.

In an interview this week, Pettinato also disclosed that one mythological tablet says that the heaven, earth, sun and moon were created in that order — the same sequence as in Genessis — and that a tablet reference to a great flood said the god Enlil sent six days of water, a version with more affinities to Mesopotamian lore than to the Noah story.

The lecture by Pettinato and archeologist - colleague Paolo Matthiae was introduced by scholar David Noel Freedman, president of the Society of Biblical Literature, who characterized the Ebla finds as "one of the great discoveries of our time or any other."

Skeptical laughter rolled through the lecture hall at the apparent exaggeration, but the crowd "oohed" when Sodom, Gommorah, and some other cities were mentioned by Pettinato.

The place names were mentioned on one of the many tablets dealing with business and commerce, thus placing Sodom and Gommorah into a historical period for the first time. They are called the "cities of the plain" in Genesis but the tablets Pettinato has studied gives no indication of where they were located.

The cities of Zoar and Bela are mentioned in the Ebla tablets as separate places, in contrast to Genesis which identifies them as one city with two names. Zoar was the city to which Lot went after escaping from Sodom and Gommorah — but without his wife who looked back at the burning cities and was turned into a pillar of salt, according to Genesis.

Perhaps the biggest reaction from the academic audience came when Pettinato said that one tablet describes the city of Ur as located in Haran.

Abraham, the great patriarch of the Jews, was said by Genessis to have been a native of Ur who first settled in Haran, then went to the land of Canaan.

Ur has traditionally been thought to have ben located in the lower Trigris-Euphrates Valley, in the Mesopotamian "cradle of civilization" near the Persian Gulf. But Haran is known to be located in northern Syria, not far from Ebla.

Both Pettinato and Matthiae have indicated that a wholesale revision of the geography and history of the ancient Near East is in prospect. One tablet alone contains 250 geographical names.

However, both men cautioned that there is no proof at this point that the place names in the tablets are the same places as those mentioned in the Bible.

Fewer women than men are finishing high school

TORONTO (CP) — Fewer women than men have been finishing high school since the 1950s, says Lorna Marsden, a sociologist at the University of Toronto.

In an interview, she said some new findings involving the education of women show that women are attending community colleges rather than universities.

Women are also taking part-time jobs rather than working full-time, she said.

The sociologist said there is no apparent change in the basic careers women chose — typing, nursing and service jobs.

"NO-FAULT" ARGUING: KEY TO A SUCCESSFUL MARRIAGE

The idea of "winning" marital conflicts is an illusion, since one partner's "victory" inevitably becomes a loss for both. That's because the attitude of "winning" an argument reduces a marriage to a power struggle . . . and when power becomes the prevailing force, love is diminished. There's bound to be some conflict in every marriage, but the November issue of Reader's Digest shows you how to avoid letting those conflicts turn your marriage into an armed camp. Don't miss "NO-FAULT" ARGUING: KEY TO A SUCCESSFUL MARRIAGE, just one of more than 40 articles and features in the November issue of Reader's Digest. At your newsstand today!

Protest day hits hard

Paris police adding to official headache

By MARTIN LEEBURN

PARIS (Reuter) — On top of a rising crime rate and the ever-present threat of riots, French Interior Minister Michel Poniatowski has a new headache — demonstrations by police.

Militant Paris policemen recently downed guns for a day of protest and more than 10,000 angry officers turned up for a mass meeting to discuss their grievances.

Their basic complaint is that the government will not give them more money. But under the surface is a festering discontent which is likely to grow more politically awkward.

Earlier this year, Poniatowski said in a letter to then premier Jacques Chirac the issue might become "an explosive situation whose repercussions could not be underestimated."

The administrative structure of the various French police forces is complicated, leading to anomalies in pay and confusion over who does what, where and under whose orders.

The common belief that the ordinary French policeman is a "gendarme" is a misconception. The Gendarmerie Nationale — with about 85,000 men — is a largely rural para-military force which takes its orders from the defence ministry.

As members of the armed forces, the gendarmes are not allowed to join trade unions, whereas members of the 100,000-strong Police Nationale, who take their orders from the interior ministry, operate in cities and mostly belong to one of several police unions.

The policemen's complaint over pay goes back to 1974 when the armed forces were given large pay rises. Poniatowski promised police salaries would be increased to keep pace with the gendarmes.

But the two years since the minister's promise has seen little improvement in France's economic situation. An austerity plan has been introduced in the country.

Discontent has increased with violent crime and terrorism, which put greater responsobility on individual policemen and made police work more hazardous.

Furthermore, a public relations campaign on behalf of the police — and particularly the Compagnie Republicaine de Security (CRS) riot police — was manifestly unsuccessful. Many policemen are fed up, and have joined unions to voice their complaints.

Some union leaders think the fact that the gendarmes cannot join unions but are nevertheless better paid has sinister implications in government policy.

The police are forbidden to strike, but a one-day protest Oct. 6 in which their union called on members to hand in their guns and act only in life and death cases received a 95-per-cent following, union leaders said.

Applicants for jobs cause giant jam

DETROIT (AP) — One woman fainted and a fight broke out as more than 5,000 job-seekers gathered this week at General Motors' main Cadillac assembly plant after the firm said it would take job applications.

The company said it has no immediate plans for hiring, but just wanted to build up its application files. There had been no public announcement of the potential hiring, which was restricted to bulletins posted inside the plant and on its main door.

Company officials said they were caught off guard when workers started showing up with blankets, coffee and other items for an all-night wait.

Cadillac, which has 9,000 blue collar workers and 2,500 salaried personnel, said it now has a substantial backlog of job applicants.

Uneven taxes breed cigarette smugglers

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say they are "establishing a toehold" in the fight against cigarette smuggling.

The Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, in a report issued Sunday, said officials in seven states that are part of a pilot program "may be making inroads against" the cigarette-smuggling gangs that are costing the states hundreds of millions of dollars a year in lost taxes.

The smugglers buy their cigarettes legally in states that grow tobacco and levy low taxes on it. They are North Carolina, where the tax is two cents a pack; Virginia, 2½ cents; and Kentucky, three cents.

Legislators in the tobacco-producing states are loathe to raise the taxes for fear that high sales taxes will decrease the demand for tobacco and hurt their tobacco-growing constituents.

"You can see the tremendous profits to be had in buying them in those states and bootlegging them in Minnesota, with its 18-cent tax; Connecticut, with a 21-cent tax; New Jersey, 19 cents; or New York, with a 15-cent tax," said George Stewart, executive director of the Interstate Revenue Research Centre in Indianapolis.

The centre has received $787,000 from the agency to co-ordinate investigations of smuggling in the seven-state pilot area of Missouri, Michigan, Ohio, Florida, Illinois, Minnesota and Indiana.

Law officer removed after riot

NEW DELHI (UPI) — The chief law enforcement officer of a village where scores of persons died during riots against compulsory sterilization has been removed from office, officials said here.

The New Delhi office of the Uttar Pradesh state government said district magistrate Bijendra Kumar Yadav had been reassigned from Muzaffarnagar district 100 miles north of the Capital to Agra, 100 miles south of New Delhi, where he will be food commissioner.

Witnesses to the riots in Muzaffarnagar Oct. 18 and 19 put the death toll at between 50 and 150. They said police opened fire on unarmed Moslems and Hindu untouchables who were protesting that friends and relatives had been rounded up and forced to undergo sterilization as a birth-control measure.

Yadav told reporters who visited the village that a "very minor scuffle" involving two persons took place at a tea stall, causing no deaths or injuries.

"Such things happen almost every day," he said.

But police at Lucknow, capital of Uttar Pradesh — the state where Muzaffarnagar is located — put the death toll at 15 and said 74 policemen were injured.

Legislators from virtually all oppostion political parties and a few within Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's own Congress party demanded a judicial investigation into the riots. There were widespread demands for Yadav's suspension and charges that his actions made the situation in the village worse.

Gandhi admitted last week for the first time that there had been some deaths due to police gunfire connected with the family planning program.

Riddle of gaming house

High court offers new deal to gambling case accused

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada will attempt to determine the distinction between a friendly game of cards and the offence of keeping a common gaming house.

The court has agreed to hear the appeal of five men convicted of the offence in September, 1975. They had organized a game of blackjack at Toronto's Chesswood Arena following a wedding stag party.

Each player was charged a game entrance fee of $20 which included drinks. The police raided and laid charges.

The men lost their appeal to the Ontario Court of Appeal.

Documents presented to the high court by their lawyers said the Ontario Appeal Court erred in holding that using the arena for a card game on one occasion constituted keeping a gaming house.

Crown lawyers said the case was of national interest and they would not seriously resist the application for permission to appeal.

The case will likely be heard early next year.

Israeli doctors resign

TEL AVIV (Reuter) — All of Israel's 2,580 hospital doctors have handed in resignations effective Dec. 1.

The doctors, who work in government hospitals or for the state health service, have been conducting a slowdown for a month to back demands of pay increases to cover extra night duties and standby shifts.

East Germans want out

Patient, nervous wait

EAST BERLIN (Reuter) — The foyer of West Germany's "permanent mission" embassy here resembles a doctor's waiting room at the height of an epidemic.

At any time on any weekday, some 20 people sit nervously on the edges of their seats behind the mission's barred windows. The "patients" rarely smile or speak or make use of the coffee machine in the corner.

Virtually all are dissident citizens of Communist East Germany. The epidemic is their desire to emigrate.

The plight of the "patients" is summed up by a green booklet lying on a foyer table, entitled 77 Practical Tips for Trips to and from the East German Democratic Republic.

The booklet begins: "There are several possibilities for West Germans to visit East Germany. Unfortunately, trips from East Germany are not so easily available."

The simple statement is almost as graphic as the Berlin wall or the 800 miles of barbed wire, fences and guns which prevent East Germans from going west.

At least 5,000 East Germans have sat in the foyer of Bonn's white-stone mission on the Hanoversche Strasse here, a few hundred yards from the wall, in the last 12 months, seeking advice on how to leave their country legally.

As East German border security methods — sharpshooters, automatic trip-guns and land mines — have become more and more lethal, the East German government has been faced with a new wave of legal applications for emigration.

Injected with a new courage by last year's Helsinki European security agreement, with its references to more human contacts between East and West, an estimated 110,000 East Germans have made such applications. A few years ago this would have been unheard of.

In at least one East Berlin district council office, the official "interview hours," previously only on Tuesday, had to be increased to four days a week to accommodate would-be emigrants.

One young couple said, "Each time we go there, we have to wait around two hours. In the waiting room, everyone talks about why they want out. Some have political, others have family reasons.

"We are taken into a room with no furniture but a desk and three chairs, two for us and one for the lady behind the desk. She always says, "You really must be patient. Have you any idea how many applications I have to deal with?"

For this couple, emigration is now the only choice. The husband, having seen many friends lose their jobs after applying to emigrate, decided to give up his job before taking the step.

Since then, he has tried, unsuccessfully, to obtain part-time work to support his family.

The new wave of would-be legal emigrants was highlighted by 79 citizens of the city of Riesa who recently signed a petition demanding the right to move to West Germany. Five have since been arrested, family sources say.

East German sources say the Communist leadership has quietly begun taking steps to halt the flood of applications. Some applicants report increased isolation, saying even their former closest friends now ignore them.

One source close to the mission said, "The thousands who visit the mission are only the tip of an iceberg. They are the ones who have tried everything else and go to the mission as a last resort.

"They no longer care that they have to pass two East German police guards to enter the mission, that they are probably photographed going in and that their conversation may even be bugged by East German intelligence."

Mini-gang in style of Mafia

TORONTO (CP) — Police know about 50 men who they say belong to the Honored Society of Calabria operating in the city's Italian community, the Globe and Mail says.

Other society members are known to live in Hamilton and Ottawa, the newspaper says.

It says one senior Metropolitan Toronto policeman has dismissed the group as a "lunch-bucket Mafia" while others say members of the society should be watched carefully because within 10 years they might grow into a major criminal threat outside the Italian community.

Criminal activity by members, all of whom have come to Canada from Italy's southern province of Calabria during the last 25 years, has included extortion, loan-sharking, arson, bombing, murder, narcotics, counterfeiting and transactions in illegal firearms and stolen bonds and securities, The Globe and Mail says.

The newspaper says a joint study by the RCMP, provincial and Metro police between 1969 and 1972 found that the society in Toronto had set up a control board to settle internal disputes and maintain discipline among its members.

Metro police are interested in whether the death in Toronto of Salvatore Palermiti, from the town of Siderno in Calabria, is linked to the society, The Globe and Mail says.

The body of the 19-year-old man, who was visiting relatives, was found in an unfinished apartment building last June 7. He had been shot to death.

B.C. policeman to federal post

VANCOUVER (CP) — Inspector Ted Lister of the city police department has been selected by the Solicitor-general as national consultant on preventive policing, Chief Constable Don Winterton has announced.

Lister, 41, a 20-year veteran of the force following three years with the RCMP, will assume his new duties in Ottawa on Jan. 1.

Too much love for groom

SAN CRISTOBAL ECITEPEC, Mexico — When the priest asked if there were any impediments to the wedding, a Mexico City traffic policeman and would-be bigamist was nabbed at the altar by federal judicial police waving an arrest warrant.

They were followed by the groom's first wife, who engaged in a shoving match with the bride, Elvia Manjarrez Curz, 20, whose civil marriage to Jose Luis Espinosa Duenas three months ago was being confirmed in the religious ceremony.

Espinosa, 25, a traffic policeman in Mexico City, was jailed on charges of bigamy.

Bargaining produces low hikes

OTTAWA (CP) — Collectively bargained settlements in the third quarter of this year produced an average increase in base rates of 9.7 per cent in compound terms, the lowest quarterly increase since the end of 1972.

The labor department said in a news release Tuesday that average increases for 167 settlements negotiated in the three-month period ended Sept. 30 were more than a percentage point lower than increases in the second quarter of this year. Those increases averaged 11.2 per cent.

The figures are based on an analysis of collective agreements covering 500 or more workers in industries other than construction. The survey takes into account the effect of anti-inflation board rulings.

During the 12-month period ended Sept. 30, there were 529 major collective agreements settled, providing an average annual increase in base rates of 11.9 per cent.

Scott espouses educational ideals

PM backs lighthouse philosophy

Victoria's lighthouse-philosopher Bill Scott has an impressive lot of mentors — Shakespeare, Voltaire, Dickens, Bertrand Russell, and Bernard Shaw.

Another of Scott's mentors is Maria Montessori, the famed Italian educator whose Montessori method is aimed at enabling children from about three to six years of age to develop positive learning habits and attitudes.

Scott would like to make Montessori schools available to all Canadian children, not just children of the wealthy.

Backed with a letter of support from Prime Minister Trudeau, Scott held a press conference at the Century Inn Tuesday, and urged provincial premiers, opposition leaders, and municipal officials to evaluate his proposals for promoting pre-school education.

Some of his thoughts on contemporary pre-shcool education are:

- Children have the inborn capability of teaching themselves.
- Most parents and teachers "stripmine" children's minds.
- A child should be regarded as one of nature's most intelligent wonders.
- Only children can produce cohesion and true democracy in Canadian society.
- Canada's adult eduation system is "a comedy of errors."

He told reporters that life was a contest between the forces of greed and compassion, or between "ego-maniacs" and "ego-altruists."

He said most politicians, and those in charge of capital, education, and labor, were ego-maniacs.

Trudeau a letter to Scott last month pointed out that education was a provincial matter, but said: "I do want to encourage you to continue your efforts. . . , It is a cause worth fighting for and the ideals you espounse deserve to be supported by every Canadian."

Scott's proposals to the prime minister were:

- To investigate the formation of universal training schools and kindergartens based on the Montessori method.
- To teach English in Quebec nursery schools, and French in nursery schools outside Quebec.
- To gather all information available on Montessori schools in Canada, and look into the possibility of nationwide Montessori teacher training.
- To produce all information available on nursery schools and kindergartens in the People's Republic of China.
- To produce a resume of the Montessori method, and its possible nation-wide effect.

Sommers' memory 'hazy' on pension offer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Robert Sommers, former forestry minister under former Premier W. A. C. Bennett, says he "may be a bit hazy" on whether Social Credit supporters offered him a $600 monthly pension for life just before he faced bribery and conspiracy charges in 1957.

Sommers became the first person in Commonwealth history to go to jail for crimes committed while he was a minister of the crown when he was convicted in Nov. 1958.

He was sentenced to five years in prison and served two years and four months.

Sommers claimed in a weekend radio interview that a deal had been worked out with the attorney-general's department and he "got the big double cross" when charges were also laid against three forest companies and three other men as well as himself.

The other charges were stayed when the minister was convicted of conspiracy and five specific charges of accepting bribes in connection with the issuing of forest management licences.

Sommers gave a somewhat different account of the pension offer when interviewed Monday on television.

"I think the suggestion came from me in conversations I had with Mr. Skillings (Waldo Skillings, then a Social Credit party supporter and later a cabinet minister) that I thought it would be a good idea if I went to the United States to continue my education there," Sommers said Monday.

Lang ready to meet some French air pleas

OTTAWA (CP) — The government has promised some legislative changes in an attempt to get French-speaking air traffic controllers to participate in technical studies on the touchy issue of French air communications in Quebec airspace.

Transport Minister Otto Lang said Tuesday in a letter to l'association des Gens de l'Air du Quebec Tuesday that the government is ready to change the Public Service Staff Relations Act to meet some demands by the Quebec group.

The changes would, in effect, allow the French-speaking controllers to protest actions by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association (CATCA) and perhaps gain permission to set up their own union. Some Quebec controllers have said they want a separate union.

The proposal was among a number of conciliatory statements made by Lang in a letter which called on the Gene de l'Air to take part in the bilingual air traffic control studies.

The letter was replying to conditions laid down by the Gens de l'Air in late September before participating in the studies.

The bilingual air traffic control issue led to a series of walkouts during the summer by CATCA and Canadian Air Line Pilots Association members. The two groups were protesting the government policy of gradually extending the use of French in Quebec airspace.

Lang said in September the simulator tests were being delayed because the Gens de l'Air was refusing to participate. In late September the Gens de l'Air listed 16 conditions for taking part.

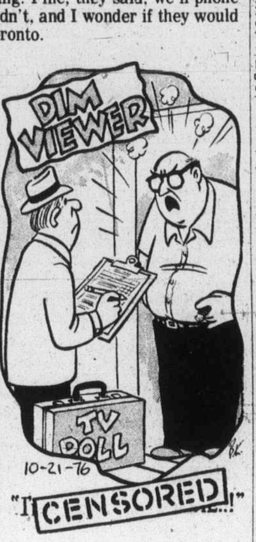
Time to take another crack at the "fairness" of TV.

The CBC's Morningside radio program recently included an Ontario chap who said there wasn't enough serious writing in Canada's newspapers about TV. He mentioned this column, saying he enjoyed it but there was too much gossip and not enough serious criticism.

Naturally, I phoned Morningside to ask for time to present my view that TV should be laughed at as well as with, and sometimes should be ignored for sanity's sake. Sorry, they said, the Ontario chap is fighting with someone else and we don't want him picked on any more.

So I suggested the topic could be my nearly-ended 20 years of TV column writing. Fine, they said, we'll phone you back Friday. They didn't, and I wonder if they would have had I worked in Toronto.



Bureau of Useless Information: Tuesday's answer — It surprises people to learn Burt Reynolds had regular roles on four TV series before he became a superstar. Folks remember Dan August and Hawk, but few go back as far as his supporting roles on Riverboat and Gunsmoke.

Today's question — If Match Game asked apple what, it would probably be core or cider. Two or TV's trillions of characters in regular series were George Apple and George Appleby. Name the two series and the actors who portrayed each. Answers Thursday.

Wednesday highlights

7:30 p.m.—Jonas Salk talks to PBS about swine flu—9.

8:00—NHL hockey, New York Rangers at Vancouver. Yes, Matilda, that's 8 p.m. and not 5 p.m.—8.

• 8:00—Beverly Sills and Alan Titus in Rossini's Barber of Seville. Sarah Caldwell conducts the Boston production—9.

10:00—CBS News looks back at Tuesday's election—7, 12.

CABLE 10—7 p.m., Arts Calendar and Marriage of Figaro; 7:30, Natural Gardening; 8:00, an Oct. 1 speech in Victoria by Richard Wurmbrand; 9:00, Justice and Us; white collar crime; 10:00, Baha'is.

Wednesday movies

1:00 p.m.—Bus Riley's back in Town (mostly tedious 1965 troubled-youth), Ann-Margret, Michael Parks. My first exclusive: he was away only long enough to vote for Reagan—11.

2:00—The Girl Most Likely (unlikely 1957 musical), Jane Powell. Based on Tom, Dick and Harry, who paid her Bill—13 (21).

3:00—How Sweet It Is (icky 1968 Debbie Reynolds loves James Garner). Only for election winners, says Matilda—5.

8:00—Juggernaut (1974 liner-bomb suspenser), Richard Harris, Omar Sharif, many more. Everybody will be watching—7.

8:30—Stalk the Wild Child (new wolf-boy), David Janssen. May be changed to undercover cops Benny and Barney, so forget both—5.

• 10:30—To Kill a Mockingbird (dandy 1963 southern-lawyer Oscar-winner), Gregory Peck, smashing support. Today's best—11.

11:30—Last Survivors (not much 1975 lifeboat epic), Martin Sheen, Diane Baker. A poor remake of Tyrone Power's sea tragedy—7, 12.

12:00—Panic in the Streets (first-rate 1950 plague chase), Richard Widmark, Jack Palance, Zero Mostel. Today's second best—2.

12:00—Folies de Femmes (1921 Erich von Stroheim silent). When von Stroheim was setting records for spending, not for nastiness—3 (26).

12:00—Death Sentence (not bad 1974 juror suspenser), Cloris Leachman. Overacted and obvious but still okay—8.

1:00 a.m.—Genghis Khan (ghunky 1965 Omar Sharif epic). Then there was his Red brother, Tomato Khan—7.

1:35—Wake Me When the War Is Over (1969 Ken Berry flop). Make that the movie, says Matilda, who is no tomato—8.

2:15—Centrefold Murders (1975 nothing). Can you imagine Gutenberg inventing printing and wondering who would be the centrefold?—6.

3:10—Warning from Space (1968 Japanese loser). With my luck, I'd be the centrefold in Great Expectations—8.

3:30—Moon of the Wolf (above-par 1972 TV chiller), David Janssen. Matilda says that howling you heard today wasn't a wolf but U.S. election losers and local candidates short of money—6.

Wednesday radio

11:30 a.m.—New to CBC-FM today are Pulp and Paper, a satire of magazines, and at 3 p.m., Music of the 20th Century—CBU-FM (105.7).

8:05 p.m.—New to CBC-AM are Pulp and Paper at this time, followed at 8:30 by the top-40 series, 90 Minutes with a Bullet—CBU (690).

DUNCAN BOATLAND

TURKEY LOVERS

"Boatlands" first annual pre-Christmas TURKEY sale!

Does the memory of your Thanksgiving TURKEY still linger fondly on the taste buds of your mind. Do you wish you didn't have to wait until Christmas to experience that feeling again.

Then Boatland can help you now!

Each of our stores in Victoria, Duncan, Courtenay, and Campbell River, has a number of boating trade-ins which are kiddingly referred to in the boating business as TURKEYS. Old boats and wooden boats, boat motor and trailer packages where the engine needs an overhaul or the boat needs fibreglass work.

We want them gone now, and we're practically giving ithem away. No reasonable offers refused. Some of our utility grade TURKEYS will go for as little as 50c per pound.

So if you are interested in a TURKEY and don't mind a little do-it-yourself fix-up work over the winter, come in and see us at your local Boatland store before the Christmas rush.

WINTERIZE TIME

Full winterize service for your outboard or sterndrive. Storage is also available at boatland.

THE ACES® ON BRIDGE

by IRA G. CORN JR.
TEAM CAPTAIN

Let a pig and a boy have everything they want, and you'll get a good pig and a bad boy.

In today's doubled game, East's penalty double was on the piggy side and when the hand was over, West most certainly thought that East had been a bad boy.

East's mouth was watering when he bid three spades. Even though he knew West had made a preemptive bid, he was positive he could take care of four hearts.

In theory, East was right. Had West led a club, the defense would take the first three clubs and then wait for one or two trump tricks, depending on declarer's play.

However, West was human and led the queen of spades, dummy's ace winning the first trick. East's double told declarer where all the trumps were (West's preempt also helped) and declarer led the heart 10 from dummy, East playing the jack and South winning the king.

Playing for a remote chance made more probable by the bidding and East's double, declarer led a diamond to the queen and ruffed one of dummy's small spades. Another diamond was led to dummy's ace and dummy's last spade was ruffed.

Two more high diamonds were cashed and declarer's prayers were answered when East had to follow suit. At this point, declarer had taken eight tricks. Declarer then led a club and it no longer made any difference how the defense went. Eventually East was forced to ruff (he had Q-8-7 of trumps left) and his forced lead from the Q-8 of trumps gave declarer his game going tricks (dummy had 9-4 left and declarer, A-6).

Be careful of those trapping doubles. If you tell declarer where all the trumps are, you'd be surprised how many declarers can play like geniuses.

280 ACREAGE FOR SALE AND WANTED

LAND LAND

A mountain empire comprised of four hilltops and valleys with magnificent view of the San Juan Islands, Mount Baker, the Olympics, the Strait of Juan de Fuca and sunsets over Cape Flattery. Probably the finest views in the Victoria region. Adjacent to 1,000-acre park with lakes nearby and miles of trail riding leading from this property. Beautifully forested with numerous attractive moss covered benches. Near Sooke-Metchosin, 12 air miles west of Empress Hotel. Rough forest access road built into middle of property makes this an ideal recreational property or ultimate building site for price of two or three ordinary city lots. Ideal for co-op or group who value the outdoors. Private sale, 160 acres, $150,000. Terms. 385-1531.

GOOD DEVELOPMENT ACREAGE IS HARD TO FIND!

Here are three properties in the Mill Bay — Shawnigan Lake area that are available immediately.

1) Twenty Acres — partially developed—camping sites with water and hydro — tennis court — rec. hall — pitch and putt — washroom facilities — everything imaginable. Only minutes from the ocean.
2) Eighteen Acres (outside of the Agricultural Land Freeze) — Ripe for housing or mobile homes.
3) Six hundred and seventy five acres around Shawnigan Lake — Potential for commercial — residential and agricultural (210 acres only).

308-A CARDS OF THANKS

We wish to extend to our many relatives, dear friends too numerous to mention and neighbours both old and new, our sincere thanks and appreciation of their many expressions of love, understanding, sympathy and the many beautiful floral tributes, cards, letters and the donations to the B.C. Cancer Foundation in the loss of a beloved father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, William Anderson Campbell and to Reverend Edward W. Oldring for his consoling words of comfort. Also thanks to Mount Moriah Lodge No. 102 AF & AM for their kindness and sympathy extended, and to our very dear friends, Jack and Eleanor Harkness, also to Dr. A. G. Otto and the supervisors and staff at St. Vincents Hospital.

Life's grandest gift — remembrance. — Mr. and Mrs. William (May) Gorringe and family, Vancouver. Mr. and Mrs. Alex F. (Noreen) Campbell and family, Victoria. Mrs. Mary (Maisie) Whitwick, Chilliwack.

309 IN MEMORIAM

ALLISON — In loving memory of our husband and Dad, Roy, who passed away November 3, 1971. Sadly missed by wife, sons and daughter.

BEECH — In loving memory of our dearly loved son, John, who passed away November 3, 1962.
WE do not forget him,
WE loved him too dearly,
For his memory to fade from
Our lives like a dream.
Our lips need not speak
When our hearts mourn sincerely
For grief often dwells
Where it seldom is seen.
—Mum and Dad.

EDDIE — In loving memory of James Alexander Ross Eddie, who passed away November 3rd, 1948, dearly beloved husband of Elsie Marion, and dear father of James and Elsie L. Eddie.
Loving and kind in all your ways,
Upright and just to the end of your days,
Sincere and kind in heart and mind,
What a beautiful memory you left behind.
—Ever Loved and Remembered by us all — Your Family.

FRY—In loving memory of dear Aunt Mary Ann Fry who passed away Nov. 2, 1934 and Uncle Charlie Fry who passed away Oct. 16, 1944.
—Always remembered by their niece, Mrs. R. Burton.

SZCZAWINSKI—In loving memory of wife and mother, Mary, who passed away November 3, 1968.
"Always loved and remembered."
—Adam and Alan.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS.

M. V. Chesnut's Garden Notes

Quite a few of the letters that land on my desk over the years are concerned with the poor performance of fruit trees — trees which, while growing strongly and apparently in a healthy condition, just never seem to bear any fruit.

There are several reasons which could account for this puzzling behaviour, and one factor which should be investigated is the local climate.

By local climate, I don't mean the general weather conditions in and around Victoria. I mean the local conditions at the spot where the problem tree stands — The micro-climate, as the experts call it. And this can vary tremendously in a matter of yards.

For instance, there are low-lying areas here and there, both in Greater Victoria and up-Island, where late spring frosts during the fruit blossom period are almost the general rule. I know of one such spot not far from View Royal school and another just south of Mount Douglas Park. Any really cold air drains naturally into these frost pockets, for cold air seeks its own level, flowing like water.

On the other hand, there are exposed positions high on a hill which may be swept by those icy winds from the northeast which so often strike in the spring. Even when such winds are not cold enough to injure the fruit blossoms, they can deter the pollinating insects from doing their job, and the end result is the same — little or no fruit.

The ideal site, to my mind is a spot about halfway down a gentle slope to the south or southwest. But fruit can be grown under conditions far from ideal, and sometimes a shift of a few yards one way or another will bring the reluctant tree under the lee of a building or a hedge, enough to break the full force of the wind.

Lack of blossom, in contrast with loss of blossom, is sometimes due to too much vigor. Trees grown from seeds, pips or stones will almost always make too much wood at the expense of blossom, and they come into fruit-bearing very much later in life than nursery-grown trees which have been grafted on suitable roots.

Quite frequently I find that the fruitless tree is due to too-deep planting. Even though the tree was grafted on to vigor-restraining roots, the upper part of the tree has pushed out roots of its own, thereby short-circuiting the effect of the grafted roots.

This situation can be detected by digging around the bole of the tree to expose the bulge of the graft union. If roots are found emerging from above the graft, they should be cut away and enough earth removed to keep them from starting again. In this way, the only nourishment the tree gets is through the dwarfing roots on which it is grafted.

Once a tree has passed through childhood and adolescence and reached child-bearing age, each blossom must be pollinated before any fruit can set. Some kinds need no "husband" and can set their own fruits unaided — most peach varieties are self-fertile. Others require a mate, and not just any old mate, but one which has a special affinity for the shy-fruiting specimen. This is especially true of sweet cherries; the varieties Bing, Lambert and Royal Anne are inter-sterile — that is, they are incapable of pollinating another—whereas the Van cherry is almost a universal donor, capable of looking after a whole harem of other sweet cherries while bearing an excellent crop of fruit itself, with its blossoms pollinated by its sexual partners.

Generally speaking, it is unwise to plant only one variety of fruit. If you have room for only one tree, find out what your next door neighbour has, and plant the same kind of fruit but in a different variety.

Jack Smith

We flew from Moscow to Leningrad by Aeroflot, the Soviet air line, on a jet that had no frills in its cabin and no tread on its tires. An unsmiling stewardess watched us duck through the small door as if she hoped we would bump our heads.

We had been airborne hardly more than half an hour, however, when the tension of the flight was relieved by this young woman's appearance with a trayful of small glass cups containing something effervescent. Champagne, I thought; and my spirits rose with the little bubbles in the cups. Alas. One sip told me what I should have guessed. It was not Russian champagne but Russian mineral water of the kind I had been brushing my teeth in for three days. I was quite thirsty, though, and glad enough to have it, despite the vague taste of herring.

Our last lunch at the Intourist had not been our best. The appetizer, which everyone agreed was either fish or ham, was rather tasty; but the entre turned out to be tongue again; not sliced tongue, which I had grown used to, but whole tongue. That is, each of us got a complete tongue, which was all too recognizable for what it had been in life.

"It makes you wonder," someone said, "if there's a cow left in Russia that can talk."

It is only fair to say that others, including my wife, ate their tongues and thought them quite good. I have always envied people with appetites that are not dulled by sentimentality and a morbid imagination. They are the best travelers.

Despite our threadbare tires we stopped abruptly after touching down at Leningrad, and some of the men in our group said later that the landing had been assisted by two parachutes. I don't know.

Our bus and our new Intourist guide were waiting. "I am Ludmila," she told us once we were under way. Leningrad, she said, was a city of 4.5 million, built on 42 islands among 85 rivers and canals. "That is why it is sometimes called the Venice of the North."

Indeed, it looked like Canaletto's Venice as we drove along the Neva river past a mile of 18th century palaces built by serfs for the Romanovs and their courtiers and cousins before the Revolution.

Our hotel was Intourist's new Leningrad, a massive but handsome structure on the far bank of the Neva. Its public rooms were large and tasteful, including an enormous dining room in which, we soon learned, hordes of tourists from all over the Russian empire, not to mention our own little group of 74 Americans, were served good food three times a day and always on time.

That night, though, we dined out with another couple who had got reservations at a restaurant through Intourist and invited my wife and me to go along. We had already eaten, but I thought we could just drink wine and listen to the balalaika music.

It wasn't that simple. Only with gestures and a threatening manner was I able to convince the waiter that we wanted ony a glass of vodka, not a bottle. Having won that point, as we thought, we gave up trying to convince him that we didn't wish to be served any food, and resigned ourselves to caviar, sturgeon, tongue, blinis, and skewered lamb; and only too late, with the champagne, did I realize that he had served us a bottle of vodka after all, a glass at a time.

Our table was on a balcony above the floor show. We were surrounded by foreigners. They seemed to be together in a loose sort of way, like people on a convention. Some of them began singing with the music, and when the entertainers took a break they began singing on their own, in earnest.

It spread from table to table until almost everyone on the balcony was singing. The men stood up and got out of their coats and loosened their neckties and flung their arms about one another. They sang with abandon, but amazingly well, like some road show opera company on a night out. They sang of battles long since won or lost.

I thought of that great scene in Casablanca where the Germans are singing some Nazi pep song and Paul Henreid starts to sing La Marseillaise and pretty soon everyone in the place is singing La Marseillaise and the Germans are drowned out. I wondered if I could get The Star Spangled Banner going. I decided not to find out. It would have been like pouring a cup of Pepsi-Cola in the Volga River.

"Are those people Russians?" I asked the waiter when he showed up with yet another course.

He shook his head. "Yugoslavians," he said, making a circle at his temple with a forefinger, as if to say all Yugoslavians were mad.

Later someone told us the place was a tourist trap. Well, maybe for Yugoslavians it was a tourist trap, but for Americans I thought it was very authentic.

- That in different human languages, the number of letters in the alphabet ranges as widely as from the 13 letters of the Hawaiian language to the 202 letters in the Ethiopian.
- That close to half of the American population "dissave" on net balance; that is, they spend more during the year than they earn after taxes.
- That the Gospel authors Mark, Matthew and Luke never met, saw or heard Jesus in person, and it is exceedingly doubtful that the author of the Gospel of John ever did, either.
- That Henry Ford raised the initial capital for turning his garage into the prototype of his first factory by winning an automobile race in 1901, and never raced in competition again.
- That there are more than twice as many families in the U.S. with no children under the age of 18 than any other size family.

James Bacon's Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD — Write about Pancho Villa and Ambrose Bierce and the mail comes by the bagsful.

Here's an interesting one from J. R. Rowe of Rosemead, Calif., who was a friend of Villa's first and legal wife and also a friend of Frank Thayer, who purchased arms for Villa in the United States.

"Since I never miss reading your column, I, of course, saw the one the other day about Sherry Taranto and the part she will have in the Carter de Haven picture, Pancho Villa and Ambrose Bierce.

"... Bierce was for some time a very close friend to Villa, mainly because of his wild and entertaining stories and jokes that Villa liked. But Bierce was a little off in the head from a shrapnel wound suffered years before.

"This probably led him to the final confrontation with Villa when he showed up after an absence and told Villa off as a thief and bandid and that he (Bierce) was going over to Carranza, who he now thought was the great man in Mexico.

"Villa was quite shocked but, instead of killing him right there, shook hands with him and told him to go as he pleased.

"Bierce left with his horse and started for the trail which would take him to the Carranza forces. Villa had one of his men, a Faustina Borunda, follow Bierce and kill him. His body was left to be devoured by vultures."

That should clear the age-old mystery of what happened to Ambrose Bierce.

Five awaiting sentence after ransacking incident

Five Vancouver men, including a deaf mute, will spend the next four weeks in jail awaiting sentence on charges of mischief and possessing stolen goods.

A visibly annoyed Judge Blake Allan remanded the five in custody until Nov. 29 for sentence and pre-sentence report after they pleaded guilty to the charges in Victoria Provincial Court Tuesday.

The charges arose from an incident Oct. 23 when the five men ransacked a home on Price Road, near Ganges, Salt Spring Island.

Remanded in custody were Douglas Coleman 27, Richard LeClair, 20, Kenneth Roger Mandor, 19, Gordon Arthur Ramm, 18, and Russell William Snyder, 19, all from Vancouver.

During the rampage numerous boxes with personal papers and possessions were dumped on the floor, cans of meat opened and thrown on the floor, jars with preserves smashed, three wooden chairs broken, walls scraped and marked, ceilings burned, light fixtures smashed and a kitchen counter damaged.

The owners also reported several items stolen, including bedding, fireplace tools, cookware and a brass door knocker.

The five men were arrested while leaving a ferry at Tsawwassen.

When the charges were read, an interpreter had to translate the proceedings in sign language for Snyder, a deaf mute.

The judge said the accused men had little right to expect leniency from the court.

"There is no excuse for this kind of behavior. A strong deterrent is indicated. The public has a right to protection," the judge said.

"My duty is to see to it that not only the accused don't repeat this kind of thing, but that others are deterred," he added.

TV group: Postpone hearings

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver Community Television Association has urged the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission to postpone hearings on the ownership transfer of Premier Cablevision.

In a telegram to the CRTC, the association said insufficient time was allowed for intervention at the transfer hearings set Nov. 8 here.

"We feel the community has not been given adequate consideration in the announcement of the Vancouver hearings on the transfer of the major shares from Premier Cablevision to Rogers Telecommunications," the telegram said.

The association asked the CRTC to postpone the hearings until January, 1977, to give community groups time to organize representative and fully endorsed interventions.

Last coastal sailing today

Northland says no

VANCOUVER (CP) — Northland Navigation Tuesday formally rejected acceptance of federal transport department proposals that would have allowed the British Columbia shipping firm to continue service to remote coastal ports.

Northland's parent firm, Van Ommeren of Rotterdam, turned down the offer, the company said in a news release.

Captain Louis Fleming, Northland president, had earlier refused to recommend acceptance of proposals made last weekend.

Fleming said the government was asking Northland for a five-month, interim agreement to March 31, 1977.

"The proposal clearly indicates that the federal government has still not understood the requirements of the B.C. coast and the nature of coastal shipping operations," he said.

The company said the government asked Northland to terminate operations in Vancouver and establish a new operating base in Prince Rupert.

"It's absurd to ask a company to relocate its operation for only a five-month period while the government searches for a way out of a dilemma caused by its lack of foresight," said Fleming.

Northland received a $3.7 million subsidy in 1975-76 to service 15 remote communities, but its request for $4.5 million for 1976-77 was rejected by the transport department.

The company has laid off 150 employees and one of its three vessels has been sold.

Northland's final sailing was to be today.

Natives, 'Army' share in provincial grants

Attorney-General Garde Gardom Tuesday approved a $15,840 grant to the Salvation Army for correctional work.

The organization received a similar grant last year.

This year's funds will be shared equally among programs in Vancouver, Victoria and Chilliwack, and will be used to pay staff salaries of administrators and correctional services officers.

Gardom also approved a grant of $21,000 to the Allied Indian and Metis Society of Vancouver to maintain and operate a halfway house for native people in conflict with the law.

Ford strike spreads out

TORONTO (CP) — A Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. spokesman said a walkout by workers in St. Thomas, Ont., Tuesday spread to two Ford plants in Oakville, Ont.

A Ford public relations official, said about 2,700 members of the United Auto Workers union employed at car and truck assembly plants in Oakville failed to return from their lunch break.

Provincial COURT

Michael Filipchuk, charged with robbing the Royal Bank at Fort and Government of $121 on Oct. 27, was released from custody Tuesday.

For more than an hour, Judge Blake Allan agonized over whether to release Filipchuk on a simple undertaking that he appear for his trial in county court, to be set at a later date.

Filipchuk appeared in Victoria Provincial Court on a remand. He had a swollen cheek and a black eye. The swollen cheek was believed to be the result of an infected tooth.

The court imposed a no-publication order on the proceedings dealing with why Filipchuk should or shouldn't remain in custody.

The judge attached several conditions to Filipchuk's release.

The accused man is to report to a bail supervisor every Tuesday and every Friday and he is to live at MacAndrew Lodge, 1037 Lyall, Esquimalt, a psychiatric-care home.

The judge also ordered that Filipchuk might leave the home only under the supervision of "a responsible person."

Edward Pollard, defence counsel for the accused men, waived the right to a preliminary hearing, and Filipchuk was committed for trial in county court at a later date.

Court was told that Filipchuk had been examined by a psychiatrist and found to be fit to stand trial.

Lee Grant MacCuley of 1323 Haultain was found to have eight marijuana plants, some marijuana seeds and one ounce of marijuana in his house when Victoria police searched the premises on Oct. 22.

Court was told some of the plants were between 16 and 30 inches high. Water and plant food were found beside the plants.

Jukka Ilmari Laurio, 18, 4181 Quadra, was fined $150 after he pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana.

When Victoria police searched Laurio Oct. 18, he had two "plastic baggies" on him, one containing about an ounce of marijuana, the other just a small amount, court was told.

He told police he paid $20 for the ounce of marijuana, court learned.

Michael William Boys, 20, 11-845 Princess, was fined $150, and Allen Fokkema, 21, 3575 Quadra, was fined $100 after they pleaded guilty to separate charges of possessing hashish.

Pressed Bourassa eases language law

MONTREAL (CP) — In an apparent about-face Premier Robert Bourassa announced Tuesday proposed major changes in Quebec's Official Language Act to render the application of the law "more humane and more just."

Children wishing to enter English-language schools will still have to show "sufficient knowlege" of the language to gain admission as they do now.

But Bourassa and Education Minister Jean Bienvenue said they will recommend at the next session of the Quebec national assembly a review of the testing system used now to determine "sufficient knowledge."

The government will revise the language proficiency tests "so as to humanize and adapt the application of the law, especially in the case of five- and six-year-old children at the kindergarten and first-grade level."

The announcement appeared to contradict a position taken by the premier on Monday when he told an audience in Sept-Iles that under no circumstances would his government bow to ultimatums and revise the law.

Two other planned amendments to the law, will:

- Make "sufficient knowledge of the English language compulsory in all French-language schools in Quebec as soon as possible and by the third grade at the latest;"
- Allow children whose mother tongue is neither English nor French to enter English-language schools if they have brothers and sisters already enrolled in the English-language system.

Bourassa denied suggestions that the changes — especially the plan to make English compulsory by third grade in all French-language schools — constituted a change in the basic principle of the law, which makes French the province's official language.

"There is no retreat on the principle, only the details of their application are changed," Bourassa said.

But both Bourassa and Bienvenue did say the decision to modify the law and its application resulted because of recent criticism.

Both men are running for election in Montreal ridings

Leading Carter short of victory

Little change in Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrats swept to control of the House of Representatives and Senate Tuesday night, extending their 24-year domination of Congress.

Leading the Democratic parade was Daniel Moynihan, the former UN ambassador, who defeated Senator James Buckley in New York; Rep. Paul Sarbanes, who ousted Senator J. Glenn Beall in Maryland, and former state Democratic chairman James Sasser, who beat Senator William Brock, R—Tenn.

Democrats also won the traditionally republican seat in Nebraska, where the incumbent was not running.

But the big Democratic bulge came from the re-election of a troop of warhorses — names like Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Edmund Muskie of Maine, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, John Stennis of Mississippi and Henry Jackson of Washington.

Republicans also scored four gains — ousting senators Vance Hartke in Indiana and Joseph Montoya in New Mexico and picking up previously Democratic Senate seats in Rhode Island and Missouri where incumbents were not running.

While there were eight turnovers in the senate — and the promise of more as the returns rolled in — the picture in the House of Representatives remained static. In the first 200 House races called, just three seats changed hands — all Democrats losing to Republicans.

Among the house winners were the only husband and wife team in Congress — Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind., and Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan.

DAY OF TRUTH: Jimmy Carter and wife Rosalyn leave Plains, Georgia, polling place where Carter was fifth person to vote in his precinct. They watched vote returns in Atlanta. President and Mrs. Ford, arm in arm after flight from Grand Rapids, Mich., wave to well-wishers at White House. Fords watched returns in White House.

Washington elects woman governor

SEATTLE (AP) — Dixy Lee Ray, who waged a colorful, shoestring campaign as a "non-politician," was elected Washington state's first woman governor Tuesday.

Miss Ray, a Democrat often likened to Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter, jumped to an early and commanding lead over Republican John Spellman, outpolling him in his own King County.

Ticket-splitting voters were narrowly giving President Ford the state's nine electoral votes, however.

Miss Ray, who served as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission under president Richard Nixon, was forging a victory of landslide proportions — a surprise, since the race had been rated a toss-up.

With 24 per cent of the votes tallied, she had 56 per cent of the vote to 43 per cent for Spellman.

Ford, meanwhile, was winning the state with 51 per cent to Jimmy Carter's 46 per cent, Eugene McCarthy's two per cent and Lester Maddox's one per cent. That race, too, had been rated a toss up.

Washington voters also re-elected U.S. Senator Henry Jackson, a Democrat, and apparently were returning a U.S. House delegation of one Republican and six Democrats.

Voters were turning down a nuclear safeguards initiative, approving a requirement that state agency heads and commission members reveal their personal finances, and rejecting a plan to ban fluoridation of public waters.

Five states hold the key

- More election stories. Pages 2, 7

Colonist Wire Services

Five heavily-populated states held the key to the outcome of a close U.S. presidential election as Democrat Jimmy Carter used the solid South as a springboard to a narrow lead over President Gerald Ford early today.

The former Georgia governor, holding steady at 51 per cent of the vote with the counting past the halfway mark, was three points ahead of the Republican president.

But in terms of the electoral vote, which determines who will be president for the next four years, Carter's margin was wider.

Carter had won 17 states and the District of Columbia for 211 electoral votes, including 41 from New York. Ford had carried 17 states with 117 electoral votes.

The outcome hinged on major states where the race was still close and unsettled — Pennsylvania and Illinois where Carter led, Michigan where he was ahead but expected to lose, and Ohio and California where Ford was ahead.

By the account of Ford's own campaign manager, the president had to carry all five if he was to be elected to the office to which he was appointed two years ago.

Carter led in six states with 104 electoral votes, enough to give him the required majority of 270 if he emerged the winner in all six.

Ford led in 10 states with 106 electoral votes, bringing to 223 the number in which he had won or was ahead.

Ford's campaign manager, James Baker III, said the president had to win four states among five of the biggest — Michigan, Ohio, Texas, Illinois and Pennsylvania — to win the election. He said he expected Ford to carry California. But as he spoke, Ford was trailing in Pennsylvania, Michigan and Illinois.

The presidential vote, buoyed by an unexpectedly heavy turnout, produced the closest race in 16 years, belying reports of considerable apathy among the 100 million registered voters.

Political experts had concluded that a large popular vote would favor the 52-year-old Carter since registered Democrats substantially outnumber Republicans.

But as the vote counting moved westward into areas of expected Ford strength, it was obvious that the opinion polls were right in predicting a close race.

Opinion polsters, which at one time had Carter leading the 63-year-old president by a margin of two-to-one or better, sharply narrowed the lead in the final days of a lacklustre campaign to the point where none dared predict the outcome.

The neck-and-neck race, perhaps making the individual aware of the importance of his ballot, may have banished widely-reported apathy, notably among large numbers of Americans who remained undecided until the last moment.

The closest previous election in recent times was in 1960 when the late Democrat John Kennedy edged Republican Richard Nixon by two-fifths of a percentage point,

Danson heads defence, Ouellet back in cabinet

OTTAWA (CP) — Barney Danson is expected to be sworn in as defence minister and Andre Ouellet as minister of state for urban affairs at Government House today.

Sources also said Joseph Guay, Liberal MP from St. Boniface, will be appointed a minister without portfolio, thus restoring Manitoba representation to the cabinet.

Danson, now acting minister of defence and urban affairs minister, was openly congratulated in the Commons Tuesday night as word of the changes seeped through the Parliament Buildings.

Ouellet, former minister of consumer affairs, has been in the wings, awaiting the final outcome of his appeal of contempt of court. It was an open secret in Ottawa that Prime Minister Trudeau would bring him back to the halls of power as soon as the court case ended.

Trudeau made some rather sweeping cabinet changes in September. But about a month later, James Richardson resigned as defence minister over differences he and Trudeau have on proposed changes in the constitution.

In addition, it opened up a cabinet spot for Guay, a former parliamentary secretary and now government whip. Guay and Richardson are the only Manitoba MPs.

Ouellet, reported to be working on behalf of former cabinet minister Jean Marchand in the Quebec election, quit his cabinet post last winter after his criticism of a judge's decision in an anti-combine case led to his conviction of contempt of court.

He was ordered to pay a $500 fine and to make a public apology. But an appeal court recently, while upholding the conviction and fine, said he did not have to apologize.

Democrats ready to celebrate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The way Democratic party chairman Robert Strauss saw it at mid-evening Tuesday, the White House was about to be returned to his party after eight years and it was time to "get ready for a hell of a celebration."

"There have been no surprises so far," Strauss told the crowd of several hundred. "We haven't lost a single state we expected to carry and are doing better in some than we thought we would."

Republicans seek New York recount

ALBANY N.Y. (AP) — The New York State Republican party said Tuesday it will seek a court order impounding all the election machines in the state for a recount, at the request of the White House.

Thomas Spargo, lawyer for the state Republican committee, said he would ask State Supreme Court Justice Edward Conway for the order today, because of the extremely close presidential vote.

Spargo said an order could require the state election board to have all voting machines in the state's 13,844 election districts placed under police guard until a recount could be completed.

Ford losing voice from stump talks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford has "pretty much" lost his voice because of the strain of his 10-day coast to coast campaign swing, White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Tuesday night.

Ford's voice began getting hoarse a few days ago when he made several stump speeches each day and kept up a running commentary from a public address system in his limousine.

He watched a high school football game in rainy weather in Houston last weekend, and he has been out in the cold autumn air without a coat.

less than 120,000 votes among the nearly 69 million ballots cast.

Nixon was involved in another close race in 1968 when his margin over Democrat Hubert Humphrey was a little more than 500,000 votes and again less than a percentage point.

But in both cases the winner had a larger proportion of the electoral college votes, which, in the final analysis, determine who will be president.

In each state the number of electors is equivalent to the total of its seats in the Senate and House of Representatives plus three for the District of Columbia. There are 538 electoral votes and 270 are needed for victory. The Democrat-dominated House of Representatives will have the task of picking the president if neither candidate gains the necessary electoral majority.

With voters filling 33 of the 100 Senate seats and choosing a completely new 435-seat House of Representatives, as well as 14 governors, there were enough interesting local considerations to bring out those Americans who might not otherwise bother to vote in the presidential race.

All told, about 6,000 offices will be filled.

The candidates and their vice-presidential running mates went home to vote on election day — Ford to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he practised law in the 1940s before spending 25 years in the House of Representatives; Carter to Plains, Ga., where he owns a peanut farm and warehousing business, Republican Senator Robert Dole to Russell, Kan., and Democratic Senator Walter Mondale to Afton, Minn.

The two presidential candidates ended their campaigns Monday night in Michigan, one of only seven states with more than 20 electoral votes. The others are California with 45, New York 41, Pennsylvania 27, Texas and Illinois 26 each, and Ohio 25. Michigan has 21.

Actually, Carter had been campaigning for two years. He reached a high point in July when he was easily the choice of the Democratic convention after knocking off such prominent opponents as Senator Henry Jackson, Representative Morris Udall and Senator Frank Church.

At that point, some polls had him favored by more than 60 per cent of the electorate with Ford under 30 per cent.

Ford, first man to reach the White House without being involved in a national poll, defeated former California governor Ronald Reagan in a hard fight for the Republican nomination in August and started upward in what the pollsters say is the strongest surge by a candidate in U.S. campaign history.

But there appeared to be more negative considerations than positive factors in the swing from Carter to Ford.

Unlike most incumbents, Ford had come to the presidency on the wings of scandal. He was the minority leader in the House of Representatives when he was named as Nixon's vice-president in 1973 after Spiro Agnew resigned. Agnew had faced charges of tax evasion. Ford became president in August, 1974, when Nixon quit under the weight of his involvement in the infamous Watergate scandal.

At the time, Ford denied that he had any intention of seeking election to the presidency in 1976. And his popularity suffered a setback when he promptly granted Nixon "a full, free and absolute pardon" for all "offences against the United States."

A tendency to trip over both his tongue and feet often made him the butt of humor and the darling of political cartoonists, further dimming his aspirations.

But if he lacked the personality that had distinguished such other presidents as Franklin Roosevelt and John Kennedy, he had the benefit of running against an opponent whose drive and ambition made many voters suspicious.

A a time when Americans seemed to be looking for stability, Carter was saddled with a Democratic policy that made him appear more liberal in the campaign for the presidency. That was in contrast to the conservative look he displayed when fighting for his party's nomination.

And while opinion polls showed that inflation was the major concern of most people, he concentrated much of his fire on U.S. unemployment, running close to eight per cent.

Wallace joined enemy—Maddox

ATLANTA (UPI) — American Independent Party presidential candidate Lester Maddox, glumly watching Jimmy Carter roll up southern votes, said Tuesday night the outcome might have been different if George Wallace hadn't "joined the enemy."

Maddox and his wife, Virginia, joined about two-dozen supporters in an uncrowded hotel meeting room, strolling among three television sets that reported Carter and President Ford's votes in the tens of millions. By late evening, Maddox had less than 60,000 votes in the 19 states where he was on the ballot and had won no electoral votes.

"It'd about as I anticipated after I found out that we were not going to get any finance anywhere within the nation," said Maddox.

Massachusetts rejects handgun ban proposal

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts voters Tuesday rejected the first statewide ban on handguns proposed in the United States.

Partial returns showed the proposal going down to defeat by a three-to-two margin.

The proposed ban would have outlawed private possession of weapons with barrels of less than 16 inches. Police patrolman's associations opposed the measure, while liberal police chiefs such as Boston's Robert Digrazia endorsed it.

Backers of the proposal argued it would cost $45 million to buy back an estimated 500,000 handguns licensed in the state since 1968. Opponents had argued it would cost $125 million to repay gun owners for up to one million handguns believed in circulation among Massachusetts six million citizens.

Governorships change hands regardless of battle of giants

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrat Jay Rockefeller wrested the West Virginia governorship from the Republicans Tuesday, but in Illinois Republican James Thompson was elected to replace a Democrat.

Republicans took back the Vermont governorship when Richard Snelling defeated state treasurer Stella Hackel, who hoped to suucceed fellow Democrat Thomas Salmon as Governor.

Democrats won re-election in Arkansas and retained the governorship in Rhode Island, while an incumbent Republican governor swept to easy victory in Indiana.

The switches came as Democrats and Republicans fought to a near standoff in 14 gubernatorial elections that seemed little affected by the race between President Ford and Jimmy Carter.

In the Illinois contest, Thompson, a former U.S. attorney, defeated secretary of state Michael Howlett, who was Chicago mayor Richard Daley's hand-picked candidate. Howlett had defeated Gov. Dan Walker in the primary.

Rockefeller, 39, will succeed Republican Gov. Arch Moore, who was prohibited by law from running again.

Rockefeller, who lost when he first ran for governor in 1972, won an easy victory over former Republican Gov. Cecil Underwood.

North Carolina's governorship returned to Democratic hands as Lieutenant-Governor James Hunt beat Republican David Flaherty. The incumbent, Republican James Holshouser, also was barred from seeking re-election.

A Republican incumbent, Otis Bowen, swept to an early victory in Indiana by soundly defeating Democratic secretary of state Larry Conrad, but Bowen's win was expected and failed to dampen Democratic hopes elsewhere.

Democratic hopes of unseating New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson, one of the nation's most conservative chief executives, began to fade when he took an early lead over Democrat Harry Spanos.

Your Good Health

By G. C. THOSTESON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can a doctor tell if a baby at birth is a month premature? Is a healthy baby fully developed at eight months? Can a woman have a ten-month baby? — J. A.

Prematurity is not a matter of time but of the size of the baby. The standard for prematurity is when the weight is less than 5 pounds, 8 ounces, with length not over 18½ inches. That is regardless of the amount of time the mother has been pregnant. In short, a baby can be called premature and be full term or nearly so.

A normal baby is usually fully developed at eight months. At seven months, its viability (the ability to live outside the uterus) is threatened. However, today this threat has lessened considerably because of advances in care of "preemies." I know of one recent case where a bowel obstruction correction was made on a pound an half newborn.

Women have had babies at ten months, but sometimes the timing is based on a miscalculation of the last menstrual period before conception.

Physicians can evaluate the newborn's maturity quite closely by its length, breathing, skin appearance and general behavior. There is also a blood test which determines the level of a certain hormone found in the placenta. This can predict things pretty closely.

containing a considerable number of new Canadians, who have threatened to vote against the Liberals if changes were not made in application of the law.

In nearby St. Jerome, Parti Quebecois leader Rene Levesque said on an open-line radio show the Liberal party was being threatened with "electoral blackmail" by ethnic voters and feared losing some Montreal-area ridings.

Union Nationale leader Rodrigue Biron denounced the mid-election policy change as proof of Bourassa's "opportunism" and said the move "showed a flagrant lack of seriousness."

Former federal cabinet minister Bryce Mackasey, running for the Liberals in the predominantly English riding of Notre-Dame de Grace, said he "did not, as has been suggested, force Mr. Bourassa to make changes," Mackasey, who has publicly called for modifications to the law since switching to provincial politics.

Job market justice

Amputee wins right to appeal

David Jefferson, the double amputee who has been described as a courageous victim of fate, is continuing to break new legal ground in his fight for justice in the employment market.

Jefferson, 33, who touched off the first Canadian hearing over the question of physically-handicapped people and human rights, has set another precedent with a move to the B.C. Supreme Court.

His case grew out of his failure to gain employment as an engineer with B.C. Ferries. Despite his loss of a hand and one foot, Jefferson has worked as an engineer aboard weather ships.

An independent board of inquiry, set up at the request of the B.C. Human Rights branch, ruled several weeks ago that B.C. Ferries didn't discriminate against Jefferson in turning down his bid for a job.

Jefferson has now been granted the right to appeal that decision to the Supreme Court and the Colonist has learned that his legal costs will be picked up by the human Rights Branch.

A provincial government source said the case also marks "the first time the branch or a complainant ever appealed a decision to the courts."

The government decision was that the appeal would have to be launched in Jefferson's name — and not that of the branch — but that the branch could pay his legal costs.

Human rights officials were upset by the independent board's decision against Jefferson, who had been described during a two -day hearing in September as having the physical ability of a normal seaman despite his loss of a foot and hand.

The board ruled that B.C. Ferries engineering superintendent George Baldwin hadn't used "unjustifiable categorization" in excluding Jefferson from the job eligibility list.

Norrie Preston, a human rights committee member with the federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women, said the council had been "particularly disturbed" by the board's agreement that Baldwin was right in hiring a man of average capabilities. There was evidence that Jefferson had better than average ability.

"That sabotages the whole Human Rights Code," she said. "The code is all about people who are not average."

Ms. Preston said the council is seeking a nationwide "write-in" in connection with the federal human rights bill which goes before the Commons at this session.

Missing woman discovered safe

NANAIMO — A Campbell River district woman who was the subject of an extensive search in Georgia Strait at the weekend, has been found alive.

A search was started Saturday night when the woman was reported missing from the B.C. ferry Queen of Coquitlam on a trip from Horseshoe Bay to Nanaimo.

A Canadian Coast Guard hovercraft from Vancouver searched the area off Horseshoe Bay extensively before turning the matter over to Nanaimo RCMP.

Police said Tuesday their investigation found that the woman, Florence Martha Assu, 43, was at home on the Indian reserve at Oyster River, near Campbell River.

Police were told that the woman had apparently accepted a ride home from Nanaimo with another person, without first telling her travelling companions of her change in plans.

Shipyard unions hold k.o. punch

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

Tradesmen from 24 unions may soon be in a position to deliver a knockout punch to an adversary which is already on its knees.

The prospective target is the dual shipyard operation of Yarrows Ltd. in Victoria and Burrard Dry Dock Co. in North Vancouver where a business famine has left both outlets with greatly-reduced work crews.

Members of the 24 unions will conduct a strike vote Monday. This follows another vote in which the latest contract offer was rejected by the unions on an 18-to-six split.

Under the terms of the Joint Shipyards Conference to which they belong, all of the unions are guided by the majority vote.

Conference president Jim McAvoy of Victoria said the last shipyard strike occurred 13 years ago and lasted several weeks. He said the unions were faced this time with an offer that would have been more than four per cent below that allowable by federal Anti-Inflation Board guidelines. This is based on the eight-per-cent AIB guideline for this year and the six-per-cent ceiling next year.

Details of the offer haven't been disclosed, but William Hudson of Vancouver, president of both Yarrows and Burrard, said he had reason to "question" McAvoy's claim that the increase would fall so far below the guideline level.

He said he suspected the unions were considering wages only and not including the costs of fringe benefits. All costs are lumped together by the AIB when determining whether increases surpass the guidelines.

McAvoy said the drastic lack of work has over the last several months altered the employment picture in the two outlets from a "possible high" of 1,800 to 900 or fewer. But Hudson said only "about one-third of the work force" is still on the job.

"And there is a great possibility of further layoffs. There's just no work."

Both management and the unions agree on one point: the severe slump in shipbuilding is not isolated but is part of a world-wide "soft market."

Monday's strike vote is expected to be tabulated by noon Tuesday, but no legal walkout could occur while mediator Fred Geddes is still actively involved in the dispute.

The indication was that the unions would — if given a strike mandate — ask Geddes to "report out." This is the formality necessary in winding up mediation without an agreement.

Conviction overturned

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia court of appeal has quashed the jury conviction of David Wayne Adams, 29, of Calgary on a charge of rape.

Adams was charged in the Sept. 7 rape of a woman in the eastern B.C. community of Cranbrook convicted and sentenced to four years in prison. But the B.C. court of appeal, in a unanimous decision, threw out the conviction and entered a judgment of acquittal.

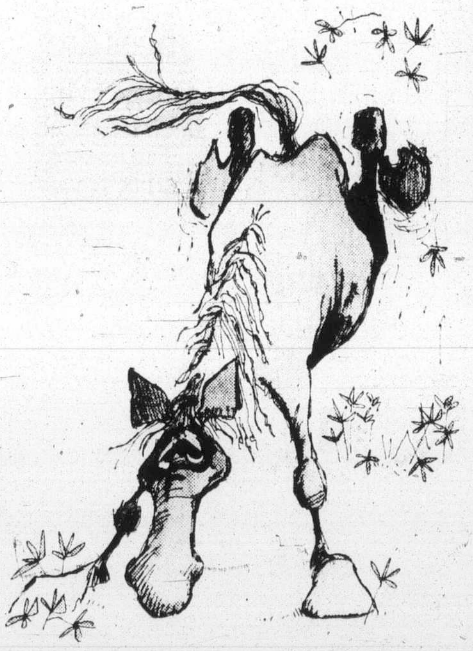
HOW TO MIX A HORSESHOT



Its name not withstanding, the Horseshot is not a case for the veterinarian, but rather a mixed drink of the Smirnoff school, a sort of Bloody Mary with the extra flavour kick of horse radish.

But the Horseshot is no second runner. With a charm and nip all its own, this great red beauty can keep up with the best of them.

To make a Horseshot, pour 1½ oz. Smirnoff into a tall glass with ice, fill with tomato juice, add horse radish to taste and stir. Sip slowly.

Port Alice hurries dikes to beat mudslides

Twice partly inundated by mudslides in the past, the community of Port Alice is in a new race against time as heavy fall rains begin their annual onset.

After hundreds of thousands of dollars damage to homes in 1973 and again last year from mud and debris being carried down two creeks that drain the heavily-logged mountain behind the village at Rumble Beach, efforts began to either move the community and its 1,200 people or take preventive measures.

After a $10,000 study by Northwest Hydraulic Consultants of Vancouver, the provincial government announced in September it would pay up to $250,000 for a system of dikes to protect the village from future slides.

Alderman Art Czech, in a telephone interview from Port Alice, told the Colonist Tuesday that if all goes well the job should be finished within three weeks.

"It's already raining heavily—we've had up to half an inch an hour in several intermittent disturbances that passed through in the last three or four days.

"But the village work crews and local contractors hired to do the job are able to divert the creeks and continue working," he said.

The consultants who devised the double dike system did so after several months' research that included building a mockup of the village and the terrain behind, triggering miniature mudslides, then erecting small dikes to see which would work best.

Czech said the closest dike to the village is about 500 feet from the nearest row of houses, with another about 200 feet further up the mountainside.

Both are raised about 15 feet above ground level, with a hollow about 15 feet deep and 40 to 60 feet wide in front, and they taper off each side of the village towards the sea.

"The idea is that if the first one overflows, the second one will hold," Czech said.

He said the village held a public emergency seminar to discuss action in the event of a major mudslide and the consensus of villagers was that they should be safe when the dikes are in place.

"We have a lot of confidence in the engineers," he said.

Fun centre 'opposition' worries Duncan group

By CRAIG MEREDITH
Colonist Staff

DUNCAN—The committee in charge of the proposed $6.3 million community centre here is wondering who is making protests to the department of recreation about the facility, which is due to go to tender shortly.

Commenting Tuesday on a meeting with department of recreation officials last week, both Cowichan Valley Region Board chairman Pat Clements and Duncan Mayor Ken Paskin said they were surprised to hear from the four officials that the department had received protests.

"We asked them to produce even three letters of protest to substantiate their claim, but we didn't receive anything," Clements stated.

The Duncan mayor said he had a "good mind to go down to Victoria and find what is behind all of this—because we haven't heard any protests up here."

At last week's meeting, the department of recreation officials suggested that in their opinion the structure as it is now proposed would cost between $8.5 and $11 million to construct.

Paskin and Clements said it was made quite clear at the meeting by the architect and the other committee members present that there was going to be no overrun on the $6.3 million figure.

"That is the price voted on in last year's referendum and that is what we plan to hold the line at no matter wehat.

"The architect has also asserted once again that the building would be constructed, furnished and landscaped for $6 million," the Duncan mayor said Tuesday.

According to the plans, the centre will include a 700-seat theatre, an ice rink, a multipurpose hall, a day care facility and several activity rooms.

The department of recreation under the NDP administration agreed to contribute $1,333,000 in lieu of the recreation facilities fund.

The department of education, which will use the facilities in the centre in conjunction with the Cowichan senior high school, also agreed to contribute $1,926,025.

After the Social Credit government came to power, Mrs. Grace McCarthy, who was minister of recreation and travel until last weekend, reaffirmed that her department along with the education department would honor its commitment.

But in September, the minister wrote the committee and said she was having some "grave concerns about the proposed project and its possible tax burden on the population of the referendum."

Cowichan Valley Region Board chairman Pat Clements said the minister's September statement and the latest visit by department officials were part of a test to see how committed the area was to the project.

"I see where a similar situation is happening in Sidney and North Saanich, where they are also awaiting word on their grant.

"The government is not anxious to spend any money and they're just seeing what they can get away with," Clements said.

At the end of last week's meeting with the department officials, they were asked by the Cowichan Valley Community Centre Committee if the government's commitment for the $1.3-million grant still holds.

A spokesman for the group, John Thompson, said he "believed" it still did.

Minister asked to save tree stand

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — Residents of Sproat Lake, west of this community, have written to Lands and Forests Minister Tom Waterland asking there be no logging of nearby Dog Mountain until a feasibility study on establishing a park is completed.

Tony Dixon, a member of the Port Alberni Regional Board, said Monday that MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. and the Sproat Lake planning committee have been asked to appear before the board Nov. 24 to present their cases.

MacMillan Bloedel plans to begin logging the 700 acres involved this winter, but the committee wants it held off until the study is finished.

"We do not mind if they log the back of the mountain but we want to preserve this last stand of virgin timber that is the focal point of the community," said Kathryn Hazel, committee spokesman.

"There are at least 100 acres of trees on the back side of the mountain which will provide ample work for loggers this winter," said Mrs. Hazel.

Grant Ainscough, chief forester for MacMillan Bloedel, said every consideration will be given to aesthetic values in the cutting plan.

Of the 700 acres involved, he said 300 will not be logged until the next rotation, several years away, and an additional 200 acres will be retained for at least 25 years, providing a substantial screen along the lakeshore.

Ainscough said a moratorium on logging would be costly and destructive since the logging roads are in and the company would have to receive compensation for the timber it purchased 10 years ago.

Chorus grows against CN-CP

NANAIMO — City council has joined, an increasing chorus of voices expressing objections to the announced closure of the Canadian Pacific-Canadian National Telecommunications office here.

The first official protest to the Dec. 31 closing of the office came from the Greater Nanaimo Chamber of Commerce, which said the closing of the offiec is in direct contravention of the 1884 agreement which assures telegraph service, or its successor, to all parts of Canada in perpetuity.

Council's objections paralelled those of the chamber and, like the chamber, it has sent a letter of objection to the Canadian Transport Commission.

There has been no indication whether the closure of the Nanaimo and Courtenay offices, both effective at years end, will be the subject of public hearings by the commission such as those held when CP rail applied to end its Dayliner passenger service on Vancouver Island.

Protection Island report soon

Council probe of ferry run

NANAIMO — City council has struck a committee consisting of Mayor Frank Ney and Alderman Ray Brookbank to study the entire situation relating to the Protection Island ferry.

The ferry ceased operations last week because of lack of government subsidization and the fact that its insurance coverage ran out.

The municipal affairs department is looking at the problem with an eye to providing a subsidy, and Lloyds of London has been asked to provide insurance coverage for the service, which operates between Protection Island and Nanaimo.

Ney and Brookbank are expected to report back to council in about a week, with information pertaining to the possibility of the city subsidizing the service and some word on the island's residents demands for a school on the island.

At present, the island's 18 students are being kept home from school because there is no ferry.

Some word is expected from the municipal affairs department on the possibility of government subsidies within the next 10 days.

Highways Minister Alex Fraser said in Victoria that a subsidy for a ferry system to Protection Island would be a precedent-setting move. He pointed out that the island is within Nanaimo city limits.

Fraser said that service to Digby Island off the coast of Prince Rupert, on the northwest mainland, is being subsidized because the island is not within Prince Rupert city limits.

Pulp mill layoff not total

NANAIMO — About 30 men a day will be kept busy at the Harmac pulp mill for about two weeks at the end of the year when the mill shuts down in late December.

MacMillan Bloedel officials announced Monday that the Nanaimo, Port Alberni and Powell River Mills, along with two in Eastern Canada, would be closing for two weeks. The reasons given included an excess in inventories of newsprint and continuing softness of world markets for pulp and paper.

The Nanaimo mill will employ about 30 men a day on tasks such as maintenance, security and keeping the steam plant in operation.

However, the balance of the staff, numbering close to 1,200 men, will have an extended vacation without pay.

The mill is scheduled to close Dec. 22 and reopen on Jan. 3.

CUPE favors school strike

PRINCETON (CP) — Local 900 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees has voted 93 per cent in favor of taking strike action if necessary to settle a labor dispute with School District 17.

CUPE is asking for an increase in wages of 15 per cent and the district has offered a three-per-cent wage increase.

ICBC loading school costs

Keeping up with ICBC is not only difficult for motorists, but school districts as well, it appears.

District 69 school trustees learned last week that the school board will have to borrow an extra $25,617 to complete renovations at Parksville Middle School because of ICBC demands for changes and additions to the building.

"The architect must submit plans to ICBC at several stages in the planning process, and each time he has had additional requirements imposed on him, which he has satisfied repeatedly.

"It has gotten to the point where the exact cost of the ICBC requirements cannot be separately identified, but it is clear that they are the reason we will need an additional $25,617 to complete the work on the school," trustee Mac Stone told the board.

In other school building news, a local contractor came in with the low bid for additions and renovations to Parksville Middle School: McCurrie Constructions bid of $294,117 is for new construction at the school, and renovations to the science area.

Hometown success story

Ten years of pizza pies

By GEORGE GIBSON
Colonist Business Editor

What would you do to dispose of seven tons of mozzarella cheese every month?

For one thing, you could make and sell a lot of pizza pies and that's the lucrative solution that the Pizza Pieman arrived at for his monthly cheese order.

The Pieman is Bob Darnell who this week is sitting back and looking at 10 years of pizza hustling in this area and other parts of B.C. He's a hometown boy who has made good but admits that he was working as a paint salesman in Winnipeg before he saw the possibility of Victoria being a city of pizza eaters.

Darnell, with partner Doug Mills, own and operate nine Pizza Pieman outlets on Vancouver Island and in Vancouver, and just last September opened their first franchised restaurant and takeout in Kelowna.

Darnell admits to sales approaching $2 million this year. No wonder he can use up all that cheese.

But why start in Victoria? And why pizzas, in this the land of the fish and chip shop?

Darnell said that he tried pizzas and liked them back in Winnipeg. He saw them selling well in Toronto, too and frequent holiday return trips to Victoria made him appreciate the fact that this was a strong growth area — one of apartments and people with the disposable income that would allow them to send out for a pizza in the middle of a late movie on the TV.

But what about all those fish and chip rivals?

"No. We're two different things. Fish and chip shops do the bulk of their business around the dinner hour. Ours spreads out from lunchtime away past midnight," he replied in an interview this week.

The Pieman theorizes that he started with a strong, effective marketing image and this helped to get him established. He and partners Nick North and Fred Manning put up $27,000 in establishing a very small shop in the Town and Country Shopping Centre in Saanich to get things going in 1966.

Darnell . . . dough and sauce

The doughty-looking little chef and the bright red, white and green Italian colors were adopted as the logo and this has stood up well over the 10 years.

"But he's got a subtle change in his appearance now," Darnell says.

"We tried to do it right. Ted Bethune, a very creative man at Cockfield Brown (a national advertising agency) did the design," Darnell related.

"But you know, it's had a kind of funny effect. The logo was so good people around here are under the impression that we can't be a local outfit, we must be owned by McDonalds or somebody," he added. Darnell said that his current advertising campaign is trying to make that local-ownership angle apparent.

The president went on to say that Peter Gazeley, an interior decorator at Standard Furniture, designed the decor and elements of his style are still carried on in Pizza Pieman's ventures into full-service restaurants.

But despite the image, the pies themselves had to sell. Darnell said that he had a big assist there with his own recipe for dough, one for sauce from Ermano Della Costa's mother and help from his brother Rick and their respective spouses.

"There were five of us then. Now the staff is about 140 in our own nine locations and we have 20 vehicles. About half of the staff are part-timers whom we rely on heavily on the big-buildup weekends," Darnell said.

Della Costa and Bob's brother were unemployed chefs at the time of the startup and they volunteered their services in the establishing of the business. Della Costa became a partner and operated the Nanaimo outlet before moving on to Vancouver. Mills bought that section of the partnership two years ago after working in insurance.

"It happened with the change of government," Mills said, with a laugh.

Darnell is not looking to be taken over by some fast-food conglomerate. He admits that he really doesn't know how he'd respond if he ever had an offer.

Right now he's studying what appears to be a successful first-launching of a franchise in the Okanagan before he expands further in that field.

"There are lots of possibilities, through the Okanagan, Kamloops, Prince George, and other Island locations," he said.

His first franchisee, in Kelowna, is Dennis Cullimore. He's the same man who used to run Shelbourne Fish and Chips in Saanich.

business george gibson

Been to the bank lately? If so, you'll no doubt have noticed the flurry of unsmiling folks standing in long lineups and clipping Canada Savings Bonds coupons, trying to get them deposited in time to get a full month's interest — on the unchallenged theory that every little bit helps.

They're not smiling much behind the counters under this pressure. Besides the hectic activity that comes at coupon-clipping time, there's an added element that is fraying nerves at banks, trust companies and credit unions.

The financial institutions, the post office, the Bank of Canada and maybe even the mailman's dog may get kicked around on this one before it's over.

The sad tale is centred around those CSBs, especially the ones that are fully registered. They differ from coupon bonds in that the Bank of Canada mails the owner a cheque for the amount of interest due, payable Nov. 1.

The trouble is that the cheques weren't in the householders' mail until Tuesday, Nov. 2. When they rushed them down to the banks and other financial houses they may or may not have learned that they were one day too late if they hoped to get interest for November on the deposit.

To some this may seem like rather small beer. But to those in the money business here it's a big item as they're fully aware that some of their depositors get rather handsome cheques indeed each year from the CSB yields.

The information officer at the post office, Buzz Sawyer, said Tuesday that the cheques weren't released by the Bank of Canada until Monday, Nov. 1 and weren't even on the premises Monday, although they got here in time for Tuesday's delivery.

"Don't blame us," Sawyer appealed. "We got them out as fast as we could. I've had quite a few calls on this already and some are asking their MP for an explanation."

One area MP, Allan McKinnon, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that he was already aware of the problem and intended to approach the Finance Minister on the question. He also said that he intended to bring it up in the Conservative caucus today.

Jack Baines, the manager of the Bank of Montreal's main branch here, said that he certainly regretted what has happened but his bank wouldn't be making allowance for the delay.

"It's part of a bigger problem. A lot of people now are getting interest and dividend payments sent directly into their banks instead of their home delivery, for safety's sake.

"At the end of every month we can have anywhere from 3,000 to 5,000 such deposits. We have to hire temporary help just to catch up.

"Now sometimes those deposits don't get made in time to get the full interest but people generally don't complain," he said.

"But, if your bank or whatever gives you the interest, just consider yourself lucky," he added.

Perhaps if the era of instant banking — with a central computer somewhere that could swiftly handle an operation such as this for the Bank of Canada — comes out of the current revision of the Bank Act, foulups such as this could be avoided.

"Why not take the coupons, or cheques, and use them to help buy more bonds? That way you're assured of the November interest."

If that's your route, you might do well to act quickly. The Bank of Canada is entitled to end sales of CSBs on Friday although less than robust sales to date indicate that they may be obtained until Nov. 15. But after the current fiasco, why take a chance?

Ford sells warranty option

OAKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — Motorists will be able to buy extra warranty coverages for their automobiles under a plan announced Tuesday by Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd.

The extra coverage will be available immediately to buyers of new cars, both 1976 and 1977 models, and of one to three-year-old cars with less than 60,000 miles.

William Hawkins, vice-president and general manager, said motorists who opt for the plan will increase coverage on certain systems of their car from the normal 12 months or 12,000 miles to 36 months or 36,000 miles.

The extra two years of coverage will cost buyers $90 for a sub-compact like the Pinto; $135 for a Granada, Cougar or Torino; $175 for the Ford, Mercury car lines and Meteor; and $195 for luxury cars like the Lincoln.

The offer, called the optional extended service plan, is for both new and used cars covering certain parts of the engine, transmission, drive shaft, rear axle, steering, brakes, air conditioning and electrical systems. There is a $25 deductible provision.

Only the original buyer of a new car is eligible for the plan, which also pays up to $10 a day for five days to cover the cost of a loan car when vehicles are kept overnight by a dealer for repairs.

Cost of the plan to buyers of used cars will depend on the model and age of the vehicle. A Ford spokesman estimated the cost could vary from $60 to $150. Only used cars purchased from dealers are eligible.

Ford is introducing the plan to Canada and the U.S. this year after a successful test of it in California.

Chamber clarifies stance for AIB

MONCTON (CP) — Bernard Panet-Raymond, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, said Tuesday there has been some public misunderstanding about the organization's position on the federal anti-inflation controls program.

He said the chamber, at its annual meeting last month in Montreal, did not suggest that the anti-inflation board was unsupportable "nor that we were withdrawing support from any type of controls."

He told the Greater Moncton Chamber of Commerce that convention delegates at Montreal voted to oppose the controls program "as currently structured."

Delegates also voted to support a temporary controls program that would conform to certain guidelines.

"Our delegates asked that the controls program be equitable in allocating the share of burden among business, investors, labor and government."

He said the delegates were saying, in effect, that there should be a program in which all sectors of the economy can participate on an equal basis.

Dear Husband and Kids:
I can tell by your fretting and stewing that Christmas is coming up again. For years I've played dumb and ended up with prize packages . . . like in (1969), a portable oxygen inhaler; (1973), a leopard skin raincoat; in (1974), a complete home tool shop.
In each of those years I assured you, with happy tears, that the gift was exactly what I needed.
That's It! This year mother is going to tell you what she wants and even where to find the best values she's found.
This is what mother wants for Christmas . . .
(1) The family together; (2) a picture of everyone; (3) no arguments; (4) stay out of the kitchen.
But, if you feel that it wouldn't be Christmas unless you spent some money on me, I'll tell you I want furniture this year; I'd like a Microrange and I sure could use a dishwasher. I've been shopping for months and I've found that The Traders Furniture and Appliance Store on Finlayson Street right beside The Chinese Village has everything I want. They're open nightly 'til 9 p.m., Saturdays 'til 6. They're even open on Sundays Noon 'til 5.
Kids . . . Our floor lamp has never been right since you knocked it over. Surprise me with a new one from The Traders; or maybe you can get me one of those Rockwell Electronic Calculators that do just about everything; the one with the memory is the one I need to help me with grocery shopping . . . they've got it on sale at $13.88.
Honey . . . The Traders have a beautiful selection of chairs at all prices. You pick one out. Anything The Traders have will please me.
Also, our sofa is showing a little wear, and The Traders have some real beauties . . . loveseats and chairs to match . . . do you read me? We can put the old one downstairs; or, you can trade it in at The Traders.
And, one more thing . . for once in your life, listen to momma . . . don't go shopping around like puppies at a flower show. I've done all that and it is exhausting.
Oh yes, and make sure you put our name down for the 20" Admiral Color TV. They're going to draw for one on Christmas eve and I'm sure you'd like a new Color TV this Christmas. You get one chance to win for every $25 you spend. Just drive straight down to The Traders on Finlayson St. They're almost always open.
With all my love.
Your wife and mother
P.S. Just tell them it's for me and they'll stand on their head to please you.

By STAN COOPER

Glen Hanlon was at his sparkling best for Brandon Wheat Kings Tuesday at Memorial Arena, but Murray Bannerman of Victoria Cougars was also in top form.

The rival goalkeepers put on an excellent display for the 2128 fans as the teams battled to a 2-2 tie in a game between Western Canada Hockey League division leaders.

Hanlon, the all-star netminder in the league last season, had by far the tougher test, as Cougars dominated most of the action. But the lanky redhead was equal to the task, and even stopped a penalty shot after a controversial call in the second period.

Cougar-rookie Gary Lupul was hauled down by defenceman Brad McCrimmon on a breakaway, but referee Bob Hull was slow in signalling the penalty shot.

Lupul, highest-scoring newcomer in the 12-team league this season, carried the puck straight at Hanlon and shot high — but the agile netminder whipped his glove up and caught the puck cleanly.

"He's some goalkeeper," Lupul said in the dressing room following the game. "I thought I had it past him but he moved so quickly."

Hanlon attributed the save — his second on three penalty shots in the last two seasons — to a certain amount of luck.

"I guessed he would go high and it turned out I was right," the 19-year-old Brandon product said.

Although Bannerman didn't have a penalty shot to contend with, he made several fine stops on partial breakaways and was completely screened on the second Wheat King goal.

Winger Ray Allison scored it at 5:56 of the final period to pull the Manitoba club into a 2-2 deadlock. Allison fired the puck directly after Bill Derlago had cleanly won a faceoff to the left of the Cougar net.

McCrimmon scored the other Brandon goal, slapping the puck and Bannerman's glove into the net after a scramble in the goalmouth early in the second period.

Defenceman Rick Hendericks, probably the most improved of the Cougar holdovers in the early going, tied the score at 1-1 later in the period and Archie Henderson, making his first start after serving a 17-game suspension ordered by a provincial court judge, was the other Victoria Marksman.

Henderson parked his six-five, 215-pound frame in front of Hanlon and despite efforts of two defenceman, got his stick on a shot from the point and deflected the puck into the net. It came after only 50 seconds of the third period and was the only powerplay goal of the well-played game.

Hanlon made several big stops in the final minute when Cougars held a man advantage for 31 seconds and finished with 32 saves, seven more than Bannerman.

The result moved the Cougars one point up on second-place New Westminster Bruins in the Western Division while the Wheat Kings had their Eastern Division lead reduced by a point.

Saskatoon Blades topped the visiting Flin Flon Bombers 10-6 in the only other Tuesday game and moved to within 15 points of the Wheat Kings.

Knee damage permanent Orr must assess future

The 28-year-old Orr, who has won more awards than any other player in National Hockey League history, has been ordered to rest his knee for at least two weeks. Doctors will examine it again then.

Orr underwent another arthroscopy — flushing out of the joint — at Toronto General Hospital Tuesday for removal of pieces of cartilege and tissue that had broken away from the lining of the knee joint.

"The joint is permanently damaged," said Dr. John Palmer, Orr's physician. "The knee now has only a certain number of miles left in it and it's up to him to decide how he's going to use those miles."

Dr. Palmer said Orr, who signed a $3 million contract with the Chicago Black Hawks last June after 10 seasons with the Boston Bruins, has been "considering leaving hockey but hasn't yet reached a decision."

The doctor said "if he wants to carry on playing, with the odd flushing out of the joint, we'll be happy to do this for him." But, he warned, if Orr continues playing hockey his knee will get worse.

He said the left knee has already suffered such severe damage that "it will cause varying problems later on." He acknowledged there was a danger the knee — operated on five times — could become permanently stiff.

The doctor said Orr had been suffering considerable pain in recent weeks and that his knee had been "catching on him, locking on him, giving way — just not functioning at all."

He said if Orr decided to continue his career it was imperative that he reduce both the number of games and practice sessions.

Dr. Palmer said Orr's knee was afflicted by "degenerative arthritis caused by injury" and differed from the more common spontaneous inflamation of joints suffered by many persons.

He said in the arthroscopy performed Tuesday a lighted instrument was inserted into the knee joint and revealed that fragments of cartilege had worn away from the lining of the bone.

"This reflects a degeneration of the bone in the knee," he said. "The knee has been worsening by the use of it in hockey. Playing will add to the wear and tear on the joint."

"I had thought at the time of the last arthroscopy, about six months ago, that there would be the possibility he could be able to play for a few years, but this now has to be modified," he said. The doctor could not say whether Orr would be able to play for even a year or two.

He said Orr was "concerned but optimistic" about the turn for the worse. He said Orr had been buoyed by his playing ability during the six-nation Canada Cup series and had looked forward to a good season.

"I don't think it matters much now if he plays because the deterioration is so advanced," Dr. Palmer said. "He's so anxious to play that he will if he's physically able."

Only two NHL games were scheduled Tuesday night and Pittsburgh Penguins and New York Islanders posted wins.

The Penguins, with only 7597 home fans looking on, scored their first win in seven games as Syl Apps and Rick Kehoe scored two goals each in a 7-1 victory over Los Angeles Kings. Penguins scored one short-handed goal and four power-play goals, the latter equalling a team record.

The Islanders erupted for three unanswered goals in the third period and wound up 5-1 winners over the Colorado Rockies in Denver where 4093 fans were in attendance.

Eagleson refutes Campbell's claim

TORONTO (CP) — Alan Eagleson, chairman of Canada Cup 1976, said Tuesday that he is flabbergasted over statements made by Clarence Campbell which labelled the Canada Cup "a waste."

The president of the National Hockey League was quoted last week in Montreal to the effect that the Canada Cup drained the community by taking millions out of peoples' pockets to pay overseas teams to come here, and very little of the money ever finds its way back into hockey in North America.

"That is a ridiculous statement and is no reflection of the fact," Eagleson said.

He claimed that the net receipts from the September tournament will be more than $2.2 million, of which 50 per cent goes to amateur hockey in Canada and the other 50 per cent goes to the pension funds of the National Hockey League and World Hockey Association.

In addition, Eagleson said, the Montreal Forum received in excess of $400,000 for arena rentals and Maple Leaf Gardens was paid in excess of $250,000.

He pointed out that the only money that went out of North America was contained in the prize money paid to the European teams, approximately $250,000.

"Mr. Campbell is absolutely wrong when he suggests that we take money out of the community," he said. "The net results of the Canada Cup was that it brought millions of dollars into community businesses."

Mid-game spree wins for Bucks

The Bucharcos scored six straight goals, including five in the second period, on the way to posting an 8-6, decision over the Maple Leafs in a South Island Big Six Hockey League game at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Victoria had led, 3-0, early in the first period.

Randy Krantz had two goals and three assists for the Buckaroos, Bob Nicholson and Rick Piechotta scored twice each and Garth Cunningham and Dave Pettinger counted once each.

Al Decker and Kerry Brewster scored twice each for Victoria and Brent Davis scored once.

Murray Kennett, a former defenceman with Edmonton Oilers of the World Hockey Association and Victoria Cougars, scored once and assisted once in his debut with the Maple Leafs.

Little lefthander wins Young Award for NL

NEW YORK (AP) — Randy Jones, the little left-hander who won 22 games for San Diego Padres last season, was named winner of the National League's Cy Young Award Tuesday by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Jones, who narrowly lost last year's award—emblematic of pitching supremacy — to Tom Seaver of New York Mets, drew 15 of the 24 first-place votes in balloting by a committee composed of two baseball writers from each of the 12 National League cities.

That easily outdistanced runner-up Jerry Koosman of the Mets, who drew seven first-place votes. Mets teammate Jon Matlack and Don Sutton of Los Angeles Dodgers received one first-place vote apiece.

Jones, a five-foot-11, 180-pounder currently recovering from off-season arm surgery which threatens his career, also received six second-place votes and three thrid-place votes in the election.

He was the only one mentioned on each ballot, collecting 96 points. Koosman, a left-hander, had 69½ points with Sutton third at 25½.

Balloting by the BBWAA was on a points system with five for first place, three for second and one for third.

Left-hander Steve Carlton of the NL East Division champion Philadelphia Phillies received 11 points; Rawly Eastwick, reliever for the world champion Cincinnati Reds got six points; southpaw Matlack got five, J. R. Richard of Houston Astros had two points and Seaver got one point. Four of the eight pitchers to receive points were left-handers.

Jones sprinted to 16 triumphs in his first 19 decisions but fell sharply after the all-star break to finish at 22-14. Koosman charged at the end to bring his record to 21-10, his first 20-victory season. Sutton also finished with 21 triumphs in his first 20-victory season.

Jones' faltering second-half performance had been caused by trouble with a nerve in the biceps tendon of his left arm.

"I couldn't make a muscle," Jones recalled Tuesday, reflecting on his 6-11 finish. "The doctor said the nerve had been fatigued to the point that it wasn't working. Everything I had worked for the last two years could have gone up in smoke."

There was a possibility that tendons from his right arm would have to be transplanted to his left — a procedure similar to the one survived by the Dodgers' Tommy John.

Fortunately for Jones, that didn't prove necessary.

Leaders take lumps

Bob Liddington scored two goals as Phoenix Roadrunners upended Quebec Nordiques, 5-3, before a crowd of 8488 at Quebec City and brilliant goaltending by Wayne Rutledge enabled Houston Aeros to edge Winnipeg Jets, 5-3, before a crowd of 7813 at Winnipeg.

It was only the third defeat in 12 games for the Nordiques, leaders of the league and the East Division with 18 points.

Clay Hebenton, son of former NHL and WHL star Andy Hebenton, made 29 stops in the Phoenix goal and Richard Brodeur stopped 29 shots for Quebec.

At Winnipeg, Rutledge was outstanding, particularly when the Jets were short-handed for four straight minutes in the second period, as the Jets outshot the Aeros 37-29.

In other games: Lynn Powis scored with 1:44 remaining to give Calgary Cowboys a 4-3 win over visiting Minnesota Fighting Saints; and Gary Veneruzzo scored in overtime to give the San Diego Mariners a 4-3 win over the Bulls at Birmingham.

Tempers flare as Braves win

Saanich Braves and Juan de Fuca King John Gulls will be short manpower in their next South Island Junior "B" Hockey League games.

Both teams will be minus three players in their next games because of fights that marred the third period of the Braves' 7-3 triumph over the Gulls Tuesday before a paid crowd of 286 at George Pearkes Arena.

Brent Patterson, Wayne Larsen and Dan Stewart of the Braves and Bill Kersch, Steve Saunders and Col Campbell of the Gulls drew fighting majors and received automatic one-game suspensions.

A league spokesman said further action may be taken. A total of 130 minutes in penalties were handed out.

The third-place Gulls play the second-place Legion Friday at Esquimalt while the Braves are in Lake Cowichan the same night to play Bairds' Trucking.

The first period ended 1-1, Tuesday but Saanich led, 4-3, after two periods.

Reg Midgley

Western Speedway lost two of its most valuable assets when manager Reg Midgley and assistant manager Barry Rankin announced their retirements.

The hard-working Speedway veterans made the announcements at a meeting of the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association Tuesday night.

Midgley has been associated with the Speedway since 1957 and under his company Reg Midgley Inc. has been directly responsible for the operation of the Speedway since 1966.

Rankin, who has been associated with the Speedway for 15 years, was offered the managing job but declined because he is now working full time in Midgley's auto business and won't have the time necessary to run the Speedway.

"In the summer it's (running the Speedway) a full time job," said Rankin. "It takes six or seven days and three nights a week."

Midgley and Rankin plan to continue arranging international events for the Speedway and Midgley will remain as a controller for the International Drivers Challenge series and as a director of the Speedway.

Both have said they will assist wherever possible at the Speedway and will carry on tasks in a restricted capacity and retain their memberships in VITRA.

The Speedway, which is coming off one of its worst seasons ever, will find it difficult to replace the experienced duo. Their loss could be a major blow to the future of the Langford Oval.

The 1976 season was severely affected by weather — 15 of the 30 events were rained out or threatened by rain — increased ferry fares and the retirement of several popular drivers.

Three other key employees, the head ticket seller, the head starter and the accountant, have retired this year which means a big rebuilding job for whomever steps into the shoes of Midgley and Rankin.

Scott espouses educational ideals

PM backs lighthouse philosophy

Victoria's lighthouse-philosopher Bill Scott has an impressive lot of mentors — Shakespeare, Voltaire, Dickens, Bertrand Russell, and Bernard Shaw.

Another of Scott's mentors is Maria Montessori, the famed Italian educator whose Montessori method is aimed at enabling children from about three to six years of age to develop positive learning habits and attitudes.

Scott would like to make Montessori schools available to all Canadian children, not just children of the wealthy.

Backed with a letter of support from Prime Minister Trudeau, Scott held a press conference at the Century Inn Tuesday, and urged provincial premiers, opposition leaders, and municipal officials to evaluate his proposals for promoting pre-school education.

Some of his thoughts on contemporary pre-shcool education are:

- Children have the inborn capability of teaching themselves.
- Most parents and teachers "stripmine" children's minds.
- A child should be regarded as one of nature's most intelligent wonders.
- Only children can produce cohesion and true democracy in Canadian society.
- Canada's adult eduation system is "a comedy of errors."

He told reporters that life was a contest between the forces of greed and compassion, or between "ego-maniacs" and "ego-altruists."

He said most politicians, and those in charge of capital, education, and labor, were ego-maniacs.

Trudeau a letter to Scott last month pointed out that education was a provincial matter, but said: "I do want to encourage you to continue your efforts. . . . It is a cause worth fighting for and the ideals you espounse deserve to be supported by every Canadian."

Scott's proposals to the prime minister were:

- To investigate the formation of universal training schools and kindergartens based on the Montessori method.
- To teach English in Quebec nursery schools, and French in nursery schools outside Quebec.
- To gather all information available on Montessori schools in Canada, and look into the possibility of nation-wide Montessori teacher training.
- To produce all information available on nursery schools and kindergartens in the People's Republic of China.
- To produce a resume of the Montessori method, and its possible nation-wide effect.

Sommers' memory 'hazy' on pension offer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Robert Sommers, former forestry minister under former Premier W. A. C. Bennett, says he "may be a bit hazy" on whether Social Credit supporters offered him a $600 monthly pension for life just before he faced bribery and conspiracy charges in 1957.

Sommers became the first person in Commonwealth history to go to jail for crimes committed while he was a minister of the crown when he was convicted in Nov. 1958.

He was sentenced to five years in prison and served two years and four months.

Sommers claimed in a weekend radio interview that a deal had been worked out with the attorney-general's department and he "got the big double cross" when charges were also laid against three forest companies and three other men as well as himself.

The other charges were stayed when the minister was convicted of conspiracy and five specific charges of accepting bribes in connection with the issuing of forest management licences.

Sommers gave a somewhat different account of the pension offer when interviewed Monday on television.

"I think the suggestion came from me in conversations I had with Mr. Skillings (Waldo Skillings, then a Social Credit party supporter and later a cabinet minister) that I thought it would be a good idea if I went to the United States to continue my education there," Sommers said Monday.

Lang ready to meet some french air pleas

OTTAWA (CP) — The government has promised some legislative changes in an attempt to get French-speaking air traffic controllers to participate in technical studies on the touchy issue of French air communications in Quebec airspace.

Transport Minister Otto Lang said Tuesday in a letter to l'association des Gens de l'Air du Quebec Tuesday that the government is ready to change the Public Service Staff Relations Act to meet some demands by the Quebec group.

The changes would, in effect, allow the French-speaking controllers to protest actions by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association (CATCA) and perhaps gain permission to set up their own union. Some Quebec controllers have said they want a separate union.

The proposal was among a number of conciliatory statements made by Lang in a letter which called on the Gene de l'Air to take part in the bilingual air traffic control studies.

The letter was replying to conditions laid down by the Gens de l'Air in late September before participating in the studies.

The bilingual air traffic control issue led to a series of walkouts during the summer by CATCA and Canadian Air Line Pilots Association members. The two groups were protesting the government policy of gradually extending the use of French in Quebec airspace.

Lang said in September the simulator tests were being delayed because the Gens de l'Air was refusing to participate. In late September the Gens de l'Air listed 16 conditions for taking part.

Pressed Bourassa eases language law

MONTREAL (CP) — In an apparent about-face Premier Robert Bourassa announced Tuesday proposed major changes in Quebec's Official Language Act to render the application of the law "more humane and more just."

Children wishing to enter English-language schools will still have to show "sufficient knowlege" of the language to gain admission as they do now.

But Bourassa and Education Minister Jean Bienvenue said they will recommend at the next session of the Quebec national assembly a review of the testing system used now to determine "sufficient knowledge."

The government will revise the language proficiency tests "so as to humanize and adapt the application of the law, especially in the case of five- and six-year-old children at the kindergarten and first-grade level."

The announcement appeared to contradict a position taken by the premier on Monday when he told an audience in Sept-Iles that under no circumstances would his government bow to ultimatums and revise the law.

Two other planned amendments to the law, will:

- Make "sufficient knowledge of the English language compulsory in all French-language schools in Quebec as soon as possible and by the third grade at the latest;"
- Allow children whose mother tongue is neither English nor French to enter English-language schools if they have brothers and sisters already enrolled in the English-language system.

Bourassa denied suggestions that the changes — especially the plan to make English compulsory by third grade in all French-language schools — constituted a change in the basic principle of the law, which makes French the province's official language.

"There is no retreat on the principle, only the details of their application are changed," Bourassa said.

But both Bourassa and Bienvenue did say the decision to modify the law and its application resulted because of recent criticism.

Both men are running for election in Montreal ridings

Cliffhanger victory for Carter

Little change in Congress

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrats swept to control of the House of Representatives and Senate Tuesday night, extending their 24-year domination of Congress.

Leading the Democratic parade was Daniel Moynihan, the former UN ambassador, who defeated Senator James Buckley in New York; Rep. Paul Sarbanes, who ousted Senator J. Glenn Beall in Maryland, and former state Democratic chairman James Sasser, who beat Senator William Brock, R—Tenn.

Democrats also won the traditionally Republican seat in Nebraska, where the incumbent was not running.

But the big Democratic bulge came from the re-election of a troop of warhorses — names like Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Edmund Muskie of Maine, Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, John Stennis of Mississippi and Henry Jackson of Washington.

Republicans also scored four gains — ousting senators Vance Hartke in Indiana and Joseph Montoya in New Mexico, and picking up previously Democratic Senate seats in Rhode Island and Missouri where incumbents were not running.

While there were eight turnovers in the Senate — and the promise of more as the returns rolled in — the picture in the House of Representatives remained static. In the first 200 House races called, just three seats changed hands — all Democrats losing to Republicans.

Among the House winners were the only husband and wife team in Congress — Rep. Andrew Jacobs, D-Ind., and Rep. Martha Keys, D-Kan.

DAY OF TRUTH: Jimmy Carter and wife Rosalyn leave Plains, Georgia, polling place where Carter was fifth person to vote in his precinct. They watched vote returns in Atlanta. President and Mrs. Ford, arm in arm after flight from Grand Rapids, Mich., wave to well-wishers at White House. Fords watched returns in White House.

Overcomes Ford surge

- More election stories. Pages 2, 7

Colonist Wire Services

Jimmy Carter of Georgia wrested the presidency away from President Ford this morning, the two major U.S. wire services, Associated Press and United Press International said.

Carter snatched victory from a resurgent Ford in one of the closest elections in modern times by winning the electoral votes of Wisconsin, Hawaii and finally Mississippi for an electoral majority of 272 — two more than needed.

Carter, 52, the first president elected from a Deep South state since Zachary Taylor in 1848, built up a strong lead in his native south and border states and then saw it dwindle as Ford made a comeback in the west and southwest.

His victory destroyed the hopes of Gerald Ford to win election to the White House in his own right and ended a stunning comeback drive by the appointed president, who pulled into a dead heat with the former Georgia governor on election eve and then denied him victory for hours by winning state after key state.

But Ford's comeback drive fell short and James Earl Carter, 52, of Plains, Ga., capped a 22-month up-from-nowhere presidential drive by becoming the 38th president of the United States.

Carter had won 23 states with 272 electoral votes, and was leading in one state with 45 electoral votes.

Ford had won 20 states with 145 electoral votes, and was leading in seven states with 76 electoral votes.

Carter won the big eastern states of Pennsylvania and New York, and the electorial-vote bonanza in Texas.

Carter will have a solidly Democratic Congress to work with. Democrats handily retained control of the House and Senate, giving control of the legislative and executive branches to the same party for the first time since Lyndon Johnson's Great Society administration of 1964 through 1968.

Democrats had a 63-36 lead in the Senate, including independent Harry Byrd of Virginia who forms with the majority. The only race in doubt was in California where incumbent John Tunney was trailing Republican challenger S. I. Hayakawa.

The presidential vote, buoyed by an unexpectedly heavy turnout, produced the closest race in 16 years, belying reports of considerable apathy among the 100 million registered voters.

Political experts had concluded that a large popular vote would favor the 52-year-old Carter since registered Democrats substantially outnumber Republicans.

But as the vote counting moved westward into areas of expected Ford strength, it was obvious that the opinion polls were right in predicting a close race.

Opinion polsters, which at one time had Carter leading the 63-year-old president by a margin of two-to-one or better, sharply narrowed the lead in the final days of a lacklustre campaign to the point where none dared predict the outcome.

The neck-and-neck race, perhaps making the individual aware of the importance of his ballot, may have banished widely-reported apathy, notably among large numbers of Americans who remained undecided until the last moment.

The closest previous election in recent times was in 1960 when the late Democrat

Washington elects woman governor

Miss Ray, who campaigned as a "nonpolitician" and promised to shake up the state bureaucracy, forged a surprisingly strong victory over Republican John Spellman, the King County executive. With 43 per cent of the votes counted, she had 55 per cent to Spellman's 44 per cent.

Washington's electoral votes, the largest western block with the exception of California's, went to Ford, who took 53 per cent of the vote to Jimmy Carter's 45 per cent.

Voters also trounced a nuclear safeguards initiative and a plan to ban fluoridation of public water. They rejected measures to give holdover state senators a pay hike and to create a county home rule charter commission.

U.S. Senator Henry Jackson was easily re-elected and with the exception of U.S. Rep. Lloyd Meeds, the congressional delegation of one Republican and six Democrats sailed to new terms. Meeds, an Everett Democrat, was running neck-and-neck with John Nance Garner in the 2nd district.

Miss Ray, who served as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission under Richard Nixon, was a surprisingly strong victor. The race had been rated a tossup.

New York machines impounded by judge

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A state supreme court judge today ordered the impoundment of all 25,000 voting machines in New York state after Republicans, at the request of the White House, charged there had been voting irregularities in the close presidential balloting.

New York police were ordered to guard the machines.

The move may mean the New York results would not become official until there is a recount.

New York, with 41 of the 270 electoral college votes needed to win the presidency, is crucial to both President Ford and Jimmy Carter. Returns had indicated Carter had taken the state.

White House press spokesman Ron Nessen told reporters in Washington that a Republican campaign worker in the state had said he had reason to believe it is important to insure "the security of the ballots."

Ford losing voice from stump talks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford has "pretty much" lost his voice because of the strain of his 10-day coast to coast campaign swing, White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Tuesday night.

Ford's voice began getting hoarse a few days ago when he made several stump speeches each day and kept up a running commentary from a public-address system in his limousine.

He watched a high school football game in rainy weather in Houston last weekend, and he has been out in the cold autumn air without a coat.

Dr. William Lukash, the White House physician, has been giving Ford's throat vapor treatments.

Danson heads defence, Ouellet back in cabinet

OTTAWA (CP) — Barney Danson is expected to be sworn in as defence minister and Andre Ouellet as minister of state for urban affairs at Government House today.

Sources also said Joseph Guay, Liberal MP from St. Boniface, will be appointed a minister without portfolio, thus restoring Manitoba representation to the cabinet.

Danson, now acting minister of defence and urban affairs minister, was openly congratulated in the Commons Tuesday night as word of the changes seeped through the Parliament Buildings.

Ouellet, former minister of consumer affairs, has been in the wings, awaiting the final outcome of his appeal of contempt of court. It was an open secret in Ottawa that Prime Minister Trudeau would bring him back to the halls of power as soon as the court case ended.

Trudeau made some rather sweeping cabinet changes in September. But about a month later, James Richardson resigned as defence minister over differences he and Trudeau have on proposed changes in the constitution.

In addition, it opened up a cabinet spot for Guay, a former parliamentary secretary and now government whip. Guay and Richardson are the only Manitoba MPs.

Ouellet, reported to be working on behalf of former cabinet minister Jean Marchand in the Quebec election, quit his cabinet post last winter after his criticism of a judge's decision in an anti-combine case led to his conviction of contempt of court.

He was ordered to pay a $500 fine and to make a public apology. But an appeal court recently, while upholding the conviction and fine, said he did not have to apologize.

Democrats ready to celebrate

WASHINGTON (UP) — The way Democratic party chairman Robert Strauss saw it at mid-evening Tuesday, the White House was about to be returned to his party after eight years and it was time to "get ready for a hell of a celebration."

"There have been no surprises so far," Strauss told the crowd of several hundred. "We haven't lost a single state we expected to carry and are doing better in some than we thought we would."

CBC gets nod; Victoria TV station going ahead

The CBC has been given clearance to establish its long-awaited television station in Victoria and to set up 12 TV rebroadcasting stations in northern Vancouver Island communities.

A CBC spokesman in Vancouver said the station, utilizing Channel 10, was expected to be in operation in less than two years — possibly by September, 1978.

His comment followed the announcement in Ottawa that the Canadian Radio-Television Commission (CRTC) had approved the corporation's applications for the Vancouver Island service.

He said there would be a working agreement with BCTV under which both networks would provide service to 98 per cent of the Island's population.

The arrangement means that Victoria's existing station, CHEK-TV, will be in a position to end its flirtation with both networks and enter a full-time marriage with BCTV. This would allow it to feed complete CTV national service to the Island.

"This is great news," said the CBC spokesman. "They have just brought all of Vancouver Island into the TV community."

The rebroadcasting stations are to be located at Port McNeill, Nimpkish, Holberg, Port Alice, Coal Harbor, Port Hardy, Alert Bay, Tofino, Wokas Lake, Gold River, Woss and Tahsis.

The corporation's Victoria station is to be built on a parcel of land on Blanshard Street east of the Victoria Press building. Sale of the land to the CBC for $500,000 was approved by city council in February, 1975.

The CBC said earlier that costs of starting the station would be $7 million. More spending had been planned, but this was curtailed by budget restraints.

In its beginning stages, the Victoria station is to have little in the way of local content. During the application hearing last March, the CBC said there would be 7½ hours a week of local programming during the station's early life.

The situation would be improved in time, the spokesman said Tuesday.

Mayor's view of housing

Province trying to shift blame

By STEPHEN HUME
Colonist Reporter

Sidney Mayor Peter Malcolm said Tuesday the province appeared to be using "heavy-handed methods" to place blame for housing costs on municipalities.

And he accused two cabinet ministers of "chicken politics" in refusing to identify municipalities accused in a special housing report of indulging in land speculation.

He was one of several Vancouver Island mayors commenting on the report of a joint committee on housing headed by Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawfl.

One of the report's recommendations was that the Municipal Act be amended to give the housing minister power to tell a regional district how many housing units were required in the region.

At a press conference called to make the report public, Housing Minister Hugh Curtis said municipalities failing to meet housing requirements in the future would face loss of provincial government grants.

Both Curtis and Bawlf declined to identify B.C. municipalities accused in the report of withholding land for housing development.

"This sort of threat (the loss of grants) is an insult to the regional districts. Their not naming the municipalities is chicken politics," Malcolm said.

"B.C. has the highest housing costs in Canada," he continued. "What the province appears to be doing is using heavy-handed methods to lay the blame for housing costs on the doorstep of the municipalities."

Malcolm said municipalities were more aware of housing needs than the province.

Capital Region Board chairman James Campbell said the report's recommendations could mean that the housing minister was "simply going to give the unpleasant task of allocating housing requirements to the regional districts," so the province wouldn't have to do it.

"They've handed the districts a hot potato," he said.

"If the province is making a genuine effort to co-operate with the regional districts, that's one thing. But if the minister wants the regions to carry out provincial housing policy, then the recommendations won't be welcomed by the regional districts.

"It isn't enough to hand one form of control to regional government. There's more to regional planning than just housing," Campbell said.

Victoria Mayor Michael Young said: "I think Hugh Curtis is too sensitive to municipal affairs to try to wrest control from the municipalities. Yet his statements sound like a threat. The province wants to issue demerit points. It's a little incredible."

He added: "To weigh the performance of municipalities on the basis of whether they can deliver housing is foolish and stupid. Curtis (had) better list off his areas of concern before he starts threatening the municipalities of this province."

Saanich acting mayor Joe Bourque said it was unfortunate that provincial policy recommendations were in the form of a "veiled threat."

"I recognize their desire to meet housing needs," he said, "but it doesn't seem a particularly fair way of approaching municipal growth."

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith said the recommendations would reduce municipalities to the role of "provincial messengerboy."

"If a municipality can't make a bona-fide decision on landuse after taking into account the wishes and needs of its own citizens, it may as well fold up its door and let Big Brother take over municipal affairs," he said.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young thought some of the recommendations were a bit strong.

"Why bother having municipalities at all if we can't have control over our own destinies?" he wondered.

Duncan Mayor Ken Paskin said he disagreed if the committee implied that municipalities were villains in the problem of housing costs.

"Developers, real estate people, lawyers and mortgage companies are the ones that want a bigger and bigger slice of the pie, not the municipalities," he said.

Vaccine here Monday

First flu shots Nov. 19 and 20

Barring any last-minute hitch, the first clinics to administer flu vaccine will be held Nov. 19 and 20 in the Capital Region District.

The flu vaccine is a combination intended to protect against both swine flu and the Victoria A strain prevalent locally last winter. The first 12,000 batches of the 30,000 batches coming to the city are scheduled to arrive next Monday.

Regional health officer Dr. Allan Arneil said Tuesday that dates for clinics at Port Renfrew and the outer Gulf Islands would be announced later.

Clinic locations, dates and hours:

In Victoria at 1947 Cook from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

The Esquimalt Recreation Centre from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19.

In Oak Bay at the municipal hall, 2167 Oak Bay Avenue, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

In Saanich beside the municipal hall, 780 Vernon, from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19 and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 20.

At the James Bay Community Centre, 435 Simcoe, from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Nov. 19.

In Langford, at 2782 Millstream, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

In Sooke, at 6693 Sooke Road, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

The Sidney clinic will be held at 2440 Sidney Avenue, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

At Ganges, on Salt Spring Island, the health office on Rainbow Road, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Nov. 19.

Licence under attack

Council talks tough on cabaret problem

Victoria city council is talking tough about the James Bay Inn.

At its weekly informal policy session Tuesday, council agreed that a resolution be prepared asking the Liquor Administration Branch to revoke the Inn's cabaret licence. Council invited the hotel management to respond before Nov. 25, when the resolution is scheduled for debate and a vote by council.

Council agreed to ask police to continue surveillance of the Government Street hotel in the meantime.

A number of James Bay residents complained to council last month about what they described as foul language, rowdyism, drunkenness and damage to their property by inebriated hotel customers.

Deputy Police Chief L. J. Mottershead told council that for permanent relief to residents, the cabaret licence had to be revoked.

This would not necessitate cancellation of the dining lounge licence but would eliminate the live music and dancing, he said, "thus restoring an atmosphere befitting the residential area."

Mayor Michael Young recalled that when the hotel operated under a cocktail licence no problems were encountered by residents, "but since the cabaret—The Foghorn—opened, it has been a different story."

Young added: "My own personal contact with residents living near the hotel revealed a very painful situation exists, especially at weekends."

Ald. John Hayes said the inn was ideally situated for a neighborhood pub, "but not for a noisy cabaret."

The deputy chief stressed that policing and controlling customers to the satisfaction of area residents was a physical impossibility.

He noted that virtually every liquor outlet in the city closed at the same time, and problems at many of the hotels were far more numerous than those at the James Bay Inn.

These hotels did not attract the same adverse publicity because they were situated primarily in business districts, he pointed out.

The report indicated that last year only six complaints were recorded from the James Bay Inn, including vandalism, wilful damage, false pretences and one complaint of noise. So far this year, five complaints of similar nature and one sexual assault on a cocktail waitress had been reported.

Alderman assails chamber chiefs for 'socialist' talk

By BILL SMITH
Colonist Reporter

His comments came Tuesday during a Central Business District Advisory Committee discussion of B.C. Hydro's recent announcement of a 40 per cent increase in bus fares.

After being told by chamber spokesman Alan Emery that the chamber executive had endorsed a motion Tuesday morning protesting the hike because it was four times the increase permitted under federal anti-inflation guidelines, McKenzie retorted: "I think it's a sad state of affairs for the chamber to consider such action."

The increase, McKenzie argued, was justified. "You only have to read Hydro's financial statements to appreciate that fact."

Emery, however, was adamant. "Our whole society has come under the AIB regulations, yet crown corporations are permitted to come up with a 40-per-cent increase," he said.

The provincial government, Emery added, entered into an agreement with the federal government to respect the AIB guidelines, a line followed to some extent by labor and business. "Yet, the government goes on its merry way disregarding those guidelines."

Civic leaders and chambers of commerce, he said, had a responsibility to say to government that it should cut its spending because by its actions it was losing its credibility.

"The chamber cannot stand by and allow this carte blanche credit card approach by government," Emery said.

He said the chamber executive had endorsed a motion protesting the increase on the grounds that it was not justified and exceeded the eight to 10 per cent guideline imposed by the AIB.

The committee also adopted a resolution stating it opposed the hike as unjustified.

Pulp mill layoff not total

NANAIMO — About 30 men a day will be kept busy at the Harmac pulp mill for about two weeks at the end of the year when the mill shuts down in late December.

MacMillan Bloedel officials announced Monday that the Nanaimo, Port Alberni and Powell River Mills, along with two in Eastern Canada, would be closing for two weeks. The reasons given included an excess in inventories of newsprint and continuing softness of world markets for pulp and paper.

The Nanaimo mill will employ about 30 men a day on tasks such as maintenance, security and keeping the steam plant in operation.

However, the balance of the staff, numbering close to 1,200 men, will have an extended vacation without pay.

The mill is scheduled to close Dec. 22 and reopen on Jan. 3.

Union officer isn't quitting

Support from inside workers at Victoria City Hall has caused an official of their union local to withdraw his resignation.

Canadian Union of Public Employees' local vice-president Rick Doyle quit his union post last Friday, protesting the attitude of personnel director Terry Fitzpatrick in dealing with contract grievances.

Doyle cited "utter frustration" with Fitzpatrick, saying it was "too damn frustrating trying to obtain answers to simple questions from the director."

Doyle has since been threatened with legal action by Fitzpatrick. A petition circulated among city hall staff Monday and Tuesday urged Doyle to change his mind.

The union local, representing 200 workers, supports Doyle's complaints against the personnel director, and it agreed at a noon meeting Tuesday to bypass Fitzpatrick and take all future problems directly to city manager James Bramley.

Doyle told the Colonist he had enjoyed excellent dealings with Bramley in the past, and did not expect any problems in the future.

Under the terms of the union contract, Doyle noted, all correspondence between the union and the city could pass through the union secretary, the personnel director and-or the municipal manager.

Service record softens penalty

An exemplary, 19-year military record has probably saved a Canadian Forces serviceman from a jail sentence and dismissal from the service.

A three-man disciplinary court martial demoted Master Corporal Adolph Gustav Plewa, 46, to private Tuesday after finding him guilty Monday of conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline.

The charge was in connection with Plewa's duties as a mess manager at the junior ranks mess at CFB Esquimalt between Oct. 20, 1973, and Dec. 31, 1974, and involved the theft of $1,400 from coin-operated machines at Club 44.

Two others charged after investigation of the club's affairs received prison terms and were dismissed from the forces.

Robert Allan Ganner, a former president of the mess, was sentenced to four years in prison and Michael Joseph Sylvio Dalrymple, a former vice-president, received a one-year sentence.

The court, consisting of president Cmdr. F. H. Hope of HMCS Saskatchewan, Lt.-Cmdr. J. Y. Macpherson of Maritime Staff Pacific and Lieut. L. B. Spears of Naval engineering unit Pacific, stayed an alternative charge of theft of the same $1,400 and found Plewa innocent of conspiracy with a former bar manager to steal money from the coin-operated machines.

Plewa's civilian lawyer, Robert Johnston of Victoria, introduced a number of written commendations from Plewa's superiors Monday and introduced five character witnesses in Tuesday's mitigation process.

One of the witnesses described Plewa as the best steward in the Pacific region of the Canadian Forces.

Johnston told the court Monday that his client could take any form of punishment except dismissal from the service. He said Plewa had already signed over his pay allotment to begin repayment of the $1,400.

City makes move

Crystal Garden given boost

A proposal to transform the abandoned Victoria Crystal Garden into a botanical garden took a step forward Tuesday when city council approved preservation of the former saltwater pool.

Council, at its weekly informal policy session, also:

- Agreed to commit the city to financing not to exceed $500,000.
- Decided to refer the proposal to the provincial government's Capital Improvement District Commission.

Former city alderman Sam Bawlf, who two years ago advocated a similar concept for the Crystal, is now the cabinet minister responsible for disbursing of the CIDC funds.

Ald. Robert Wright said the fact that Bawlf had pushed the proposal in the past "encourages me. I can see obvious assistance from that area."

Mayor Michael Young said the development proposal would be ready soon for presentation to the CIDC.

The proposal, outlined last week by Ald. John Hayes, envisages a tea garden and 200-seat theatre in the 52-year-old building, as well as the botanical garden.

Hayes said council had three options: demolish the Crystal Garden at a cost which could run as high as $250,000; leave the derelict building the way it is, which amounted to eventual demolition; or preserve it.

He suggested the third because "the building is basically a huge greenhouse."

ICBC leading school costs

Keeping up with ICBC is not only difficult for motorists, but school districts as well, it appears.

District 69 school trustees learned last week that the school board will have to borrow an extra $25,617 to complete renovations at Parksville Middle School because of ICBC demands for changes and additions to the building.

"The architect must submit plans to ICBC at several stages in the planning process, and each time he has had additional requirements imposed on him, which he has satisfied repeatedly.

"It has gotten to the point where the exact cost of the ICBC requirements cannot be separately identified, but it is clear that they are the reason we will need an addition on the school," trustee Mac Stone told the board.

In other school building news, a local contractor came in with the low bid for additions and renovations to Parksville Middle School. McCurrie Constructions bid of $294,117 is for new construction at the school, and renovations to the science area.
